But in this assurance of inevitable progress, there is to be found no justification for the further maintenance of duties, which only tend to reduce the wates of labor, without conferring benefits on any interest whatever: duties which only impair our ability to sell commodities in the open natural and healthy growth of business. All such unnecessary and hurtful obstructions should be removed without delay; and it will be a mockmake clear to those who depend upon their daily labor for their daily bread

The Republican party believes in the doctrine of protection. It insists that protective duties are constitutional and are necessary in order to insure to the workingmen a fair remuneration for their labor. It would, therefore, imprese duties as nearly and not for protection, except so far as duties so imposed necessarily af-ford incidental protection; that proford incidental protection; that pro-tective duties can not, and do not, favorably affect the general rate of wages; that legislation is powerless to permanently increase the remunera-tion for labor, although it may seriously impair it; thet protection can divert labor and capital from more profitable into less profitable channels of industry. It recognizes, however, the fact that the protective system to make it idle now to raise the constitutional question; that the amount of capital and labor now engaged in the protected industries is too great to admit of any legislation likely to do them any real injury; that the only reform now possible is in the re-duction and removal of duties which are no longer needed to insure their continued existence; that these excessive duties are in reality obstructive to their prosperity; that duties on raw materials should be removed, because such duties constitute a practical de-duction from the wages of labor. #### CHRISTMAS RECESS.

Opinions of Senator Morgan--- What is Thought of Hewitt's Letter --- A Civil Service Reform Bill --- North Carolina Unofficial People in Washington --- Gen. Ransom's Committee Clerkship.

Correspondence of the Observer. Washington, Dec. 31.-Last evening a friend of mine, who is an inti-mate friend of General Morgan, the distinguished Senator from Alabama, had a conversation with that gentleman on the course of politics and the prospects of important legislation this session. General Morgan said the policy of the Democratic party was aggressive. The time, he thought, was passed when the Democracy had to take its cue from the Republicans. We make the issues; they are on the defensive. He applauded warmly this offensive programme, and predicted the best results to accrue therefrom. While he did not go into par ticulars as to what the House Committee on Ways and Means should report, he said that the reforms attempted should be thorough, so far as there was ability to carry them into execution. This would require a long session, extending possibly to August. He did not believe in a half-hearted policy. Too long already had the party acred on the defensive. Its line he rejoiced to know was to Its line, he rejoiced to know, was to be bolder in the future. As to the internal revenue, in which there was much warm interest in several of the Southern States, he would suggest the retention of at least a portion of the tax and some modification of the system by which the people oppressed could be relieved. General Morgan is in hearty accord with the strict school of Revenue Reform, of which Beck and Vance in the Senate, rocates and able exponents. Hewitt's letter to the Albany argus covers the subject of the customs revenue at every essential point of contact. Its tone is regarded as very moderate, but its suggestions are far-reaching.

Bill H. R., No. 1110, is directly in the line of civil service reform. It was introduced by Gen. R B. Vance. This bill provides that it shall be a misdemeanor, punishable by fine not exceeding $5,000 and dismissal from office for any officer under the United States Government, including the three departments, to accept of a free pass or ticket over any railroad, or to accept as a gift, except as a lawful legatee, any stock or bonds of any national bank or telegraph corpora-tion; and that all such officers or employes of the General Government, holding such pass or railroad ticket ment, so as not to cause a shock in encing official action, shall immediately surrender such passes, etc. The second section provides for forfeiture of commission and fine in discretion of the court. The third section relates to officers, attorneys and employes of railroads, national banks and telegraph companies, who shall violate the provisions of the act and be convicted of the same in any district court of the United States, makes the punishment not less than $500 nor more than $5,000 in each and every case. he fourth section repeals all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the present act. This measure, or something like it, would seem to be necessary. The abuse is one which strikes at the root of our liberties. The movement to eradicate it ought Residing here also are Maj. Wood-bury and Mr. Sully Wheeler, sons of the North Carolina historian. The former has a law office in town, but resides a few miles in the country.

Dr. Cook, formerly of Granville county, Mr. Mitchell, once a citizen of Newbern, Mr. Bishop, (a druggist.) also from the latter city, these, with the gentlemen named in the above paragraphs, are some of the resident unofficial ex-Carolinians. Mr. Daniel R. Goodloe, the journalist and historian, although residing here, would make a vigorous protest if the "ex" were placed to his credit. Not long ago I introduced him to Gen. Corse, of Alexandria, as a former citizen of North Carolina. "Not at all," so id Mr. Goodloe; "I am always a citizen of North Carolina." Fab. H. Bushee, Esq., of Raleigh, has been appointed clerk of Senator Ransom's select committee on the Potomac River's front, and inducted nto the position.

A Cure for Tramps.

The stone-breaking process, with a ball and chain attachment, adopted for the tramps by the freeholders around Princeton, N. J., some weeks ago, has been more than successsful, the tramps having left for parts unknown. Those who were arrested at the time the law went into effect departed from the city the moment they were released from confinement and work. The plan was a test one, but its success has been so great that it will probably be adopted in most of the counties of the State.

Jerseys in Georgia, It is stated on good authority that there are now not less than 600 registered Jersey cattle in Georgia, and the number is being rapidly augmented by importation. It is said the climate of Jersey strongly resembl s that of Georgia and that the cattle acclimatize without trouble. There is also a very general improvement of the native cattle going on in Georgia by the use of fine bulls. gia by the use of fine bulls.

MR. HEWITT'S POSITION.

Mr. Abram S. Hewitt, of New York, who is himself largely interested in the manufacture of iron, has written a letter to the Albany Argus giving his views upon the tariff question and the course that ought to be | mate result. pursued in the line of reform. He attributes the great depression in certain branches of our industries to sive protection, which production was forced more rapidly than the home and foreign demand could meet, and consequently stagnation resulted. Hence not only the manufacturer suffers, but the employees suffer in reduction of wages made necessary by the unprofitable business of the employer. After pointing out the evils he then goes on to suggest the reme-

So far as any relief can be provided by legislation for the existing state of affairs the remedy must be found, first, in freeing raw materials from all duties; and, secondly, in imposing rates of duty on manufactured pro ducts not more than sufficient to make good the difference in the amount paid for labor in the production of any given article in this country, as compared with the amount paid for the same labor in other coun tries with which we compete For afforded by revenue duties will, as a Protection is needed.

I am aware that the last proposition involves the protective idea to some extent, but to no greater extent than is the logical outgrowth of our past legislation. If we had never had pro tection we should not be required to pay any attention to the rates of labor, which are the result, not of protection, but of other conditions entirely independent of legislation. But the protective system has undoubtedly built up some branches of industry which otherwise might not, in consequence of the higher rate of wages, have existed. Inasmuch as this is their misfortune and not their fault, no sensible legislator would strike those industries down by the sudden abrogation of the protective system. We should, nevertheless, natural laws to a better and sounder But in this assurance of inevitable markets of the world, and hinder the ery of duty if Congress should fail to open the way to "freer trade," and wider markets for our products, through any fear of consequences to politicians who have not the courage of their convictions, or have no other convictions than the desire for office. The mere politician follows public opinion; the true statesman instructs it. His constant aim should be to the real basis upon which their welfare rests, and then to trust to their intelligence and votes for support. Success on any other condition would be dishonor. Any party which expects to get power by playing the game of "hide and seek" in politics does not deserve, and will not gain, the confidence of the country.

The only living issue then between the two great political parties which divide the country. divide the country, as I understand it, is this—whether the revenue system shall be reformed, and upon what basis of principle it shall be setprohibitory as possible on articles proprohibitory as possible on articles produced in this country, and as a policy make free those articles which are not or cannot be produced here.

The Democratic party insists that the constitution merely provides for the imposition of duties for revenue and not for protection.

the question were an open one, the Democratic party would prefer to raise the public revenue by duties tries. But the question is foreclosed by the great extent of the protection industries replacing dead industries, which otherwise would have thriven. The Democratic party, recognizing the necessity, therefore, of reforming the tariff in such a way as not to de prive these industries of the incidental protection afforded by reasonable revenue duties, insist that the protec-tive system shall not be enlarged, and believes that moderate duties producing on the average of years a sufficient revenue are adequate for protection, at the only times when it is now needed; that is, in bad times. when our foreign competitors would seek to get rid of their surplus product in our markets, which, considering that an idle population is the greatest social calamity, we must then preserve, in order to give employment to our labor engaged in the protected industries; that at all other periods extra protective duties merely give excessive profits to one class at the expense of other classes, ending in over-production, stagnation of business and irregular employment for labor, powerless to protect itself against the errors of legislation and selfish action of capital striving for unreasonable profits. The condition of the business of the country at this time is conclusive proof that the protime is conclusive proof that the protective system cannot relieve either labor or capital from the consequences of over-production, which is its legiti-

Between the two political parties representing these two opposing views the country is soon to make its choice. The Republican party offers or represent the party offers of the republican party offers on represent the party of the representation of the party of the fers no remedy for the policy which has produced the existing paralysis of industry. The Democratic party proposes to open the way to freer markets, fuller trade, and better wages by abolishing the duties on raw materials and removing the purely obstructive features of the tariff. If the Democratic House shall frame and pass a judicious measure of revenue reform, carefully adjusted to the actual condition of our suffering industries, and the Republican Senate shall refuse to concur, the issue will be fairly joined. The people can then decide whether the do-nothing party now in power shall be replaced by an administration which will remove the artificial barriers to healthy progress. When this is done, and not till then, will the country realize that it is no longer an infantat nurse. but a veritable giant, only requiring

Mr. Hewitt believes in reform; believes in lightening the burdens upon this purpose the incidental protection | the people, but he wisely recognizes the necessity of pursuing this reform our industries nor to deprive them of a "reasonable amount" of protection.
