FROM A SOUTHERN STANDPOINT. There is no question before the American people to-day in which local interests enter so largely as in the matter of the tariff, which is after all, say what you will about it, a local question. There is no locality or section, as far as we know, averse to a protective tariff on the particular product of that section, whether natural or manufactured, and, vice versa, nearly all people are in favor of a low tariff or no tariff at all on such articles as they buy and use but do not produce. That's where the human nature comes in, the streak of selfishness that runs through average mor-Identified with the South, with all our interests, all our hopes for the future here, we want to see her lead in the race of material progress as she has led in other things. In statesmanship, politics, war, she has made a glorious record, and we want to see that record supplemented by grand achievements in the industrial contests in which the world is now so actively engaged. We believe that a judiciously arranged and reasonable protective tariff will aid her in this, and this is why we endorse and advocate such a tariff. We believe that free trade, or anything bordering on free trade would throw obstacles in her way which it would take years to overcome, if she ever overcame them. The South with her infant industries (for they are infant industries here) has not only the rich and ong established manufactories of the North to compete with, but also the nanufactories of Europe. She has the wealth and experience of the one, and the wealth, experience and cheap labor, also, of the other to contend against. Under the protective system she has made headway, successfully competed with both, because nature has given her certain advantages which they do not possess. Here is where her advantage is. But with her present limited capital this alone capital is ample to contend against capital elsewhere, then protection may be no longer necessary, and our Southern industries can take care of themselves. Then, perhaps, with her natural advantages, increased resources, increased means of traffic, and increased wealth she can bid defiance to the world, but she has not the ducats in her coffers to do it yet.

Does any one suppose that under a free trade system the manufactories of they South would have multiplied as they have within the past ten and especially within the past five years?

would not enable her to compete with her wealthier and more experienced the Journal: antagonists, who, manufacturing so much more largely, could sell at a smaller profit and thus control the markets, especially so if the tariff were so low as to open our ports to the unrestricted products of European industries. The great majority of our Southern industries are conducted by men of limited capital; but tew of them have a large capital behind them. When the time comes that the Roston Herald. The New York Herald has been devoting considerable space of late to interviews with alleged merchants and manufacturers, with a view of showing that there is a very general hostility to the theory of a tariff for protection. In one of these interviews a table was presented to the champion of free trade, made up from the census reports of 1860 and 1880, showing the increase of wages in the general manufacturing industries of the country, the former being an era of comparatively free trade. The table was as follows:

Woolen and worsted goods. $234 Iron and steel 355 Cotton 200

The free trade champion did not attempt to deny the accuracy of the above figures, but he did assert that it is small comfort to have your wages go up twenty-five cents a day when the price of living goes up twice as much. He further declared that 'everything the laboring man has to buy is fully 33 per cent. higher now than it was before the war, under the era of free trade." This is not a new declaration, since the free trade advocate never fails to repeat it, proba-bly believing that it is true. It has been so frequently asserted and reit erated that without doubt, thousands of newspaper readers believe that it is true. To show that it is not true and how very false it is, we will give the wholesale prices of a number of articles of prime necessity in Decempublished in the market reports of

This list, which might be extended indefinitely, proves the entire falsity of the stock assertion of free trade advocates. The prices of the necessaries of life, it will be seen, are quite as low now as they were at the close of 1859, after the country had had a years. Even the articles which are most protected, like iron and cotton goods, are considerably lower now than in 1859. To these might have been added the staple woolen goods, such as our mills make. Even woolen blankets are cheaper now than in 1859, while raw wool with the present duty is not so high now as at that We commend these figures to the editor and orator who is so profuse in his rhetoric and so very prudent in the presentation of facts and

The Postal Revenues. Washington, Jan. 16.-Mr. Hazen third assistant Postmaster-General, has compiled a statement, based on the returns from 140 postoffices, which usually return one-half of the though but few of them are of large proportions. But they have prospostal revenues, showing that the gross receipts for the quarter ended December 31, 1883, were $5,653,876. They continue to increase. And as This is a falling off from the receipts they have prospered so have the during the corresponding quarter in the previous year of $183,854, or 1 3-10 per cent. As the reduction in people among whom they have been established prospered. Our people postage went into effect during this are better off to-day than they were quarter, the returns were awaited two, three or four years ago; the with some anxiety by the postal officials. A loss of 5 per cent. in revenue had been expected, and these returns indicate that the department will be in receipt of a revenue sufficient at least to meet its expenses during the protective system, which so many present fiscal year.

As it is a barbed wire it would half a dozen bands of rebels, and Col. Claiborne's regiment was the most formidable antagonist he had yet encountered. The engagement was not an important one, and Purvis' "Re-cord of the Rebellion" is the only his tory of the war which mentions it. But it was remarkable for the daring ing trade, and reduction of wages is bravery of two men, who proved themselves the only true soldiers out of a whole company. In the early part of the day Col. Claiborne's regiment was, with the exception of one company, bearing the whole brunt of Stoneman's terrific onslaughts. By 3 o'clock in the afternoon the fine body of men which that morning formed the Thirty-seventh regiment had been reduced to a mere handful. They lad been decimated again and again. One more attack and not a soul would have been left. With the best of their men either killed or wounded, and the remainder ready to succumb with fatigue and wounds, there seemed no possibility of escape for any one. But suddenly the miss-ing company appeared on the field, even with the re-enfo cement, the fight was hopeless, a shout of relief went up from the wearied and bleed. ing survivors. There was only one chance for them, and their commander was quick to see it. In a flash he had leaped from his horse and, calling on the new arrivals, he shouted: "Every man dismount and of Stoneman's brigade appeared over the crest of the hill in front, and the cheers of the Union soldiers were ringing in the ears of the Confederates. In vain did their Colonel try to rally them and urge them on The solid line of steel in front was too ap palling, and almost to a man they broke and fled. A second later, and Col. Claiborne found himself deserted by all his men but one. That man North Carolina, whom he had, but a short time before, taken from the ranks and promoted to a captaincy for brave and daring conduct on the battle field. His name was Roberts, and as he pressed close beside his commanding officer he shouted, "I'll stay by you, Colonel, if I lose every drop of blood in my body." The words were hardly out of his mouth before he fell full length on the ground with a rifle ball through his chest. The next moment Col. Claiborne was surrounded by the boys in blue and captured. He afterwards reported to the Confederate government the death of Capt. Roberts, and from that day until yesterday, exactly twenty years, he has heard nothing from the man who aided him in his charge on Stoneman's brigade. Yesterday morning Col. Claiborne, while looking over his letters, came to one with the postmark "Raleigh, addressed in lead pencil to Maj. G. R. Claiborne, St. Louis. On opening it the first thing he saw was the name "Capt. T. B. Roberts." Jumping to his feet he exclaimed to a bystander? "My God, I have got a letter from the dead. I saw this man shot and killed with my own eyes at the battle of Morehead, December 31, 1863, and here he is writing to me." The letter, however, explained how Capt. Roberts escaped, and as all the circumstances are so remarkable, it is produced here verbatim:

RALEIGH, N. C., Dec. 26.

MAJ. CLAIBORNE:-I have been trying to find out your address ever since the war; have asked hundreds of people about it, and have only just succeeded. I believe I would rather see you and talk to you than any other man on God Almighty's earth. Do you remember when you rode up to me and made me a captain at the battle of Orange Court House? I was only a tar heel soldier before that, but when you done what you did would have died for you. Then do you remember the right at Morehead when you and I started alone to charge Stoneman's brigade? I tell you that fellow Stoneman was the worst cuss in the whole Yankee army for us fellows to tackle. But that d- company of mine. Wan't they the meanest, most cowardly—of—you ever saw? I tell you they were the worst God Almighty ever had a hand in making. No decent man would have run off and eft you in the lurch the way they lid at If they had felt like me they would have died every d-mother's son of them, first. You thought I was dead, didn't ou? Well, I am the healthiest dead nan in North Carolina. I got an ugly wound in that scrimmage at Morehead, and never did know how t all turned out, but long after you had all gone I came to and found a noss there and managed to get on him and ride until I found some friends who took care of me and rought me out O. K. Now, Major, I want you to write me a long letter and tell me all about yourself and what you are doing.

A Passenger Train on Fire Darting Along at a Fearful Speed ... Several Passengers Burned to Death and Others Badly Injured.

Bradford, Pa. Jan. 16.—The engineer of train No. 2, a through train between Wellsville, N. Y. and Bradford, east of here at 9:45 yesterday discovered oil on the track. He reversed his engine, but was too late and the brakes could not hold the train. It dashed into the oil, which was fresh and gassy. Sparks from the fire box ignited the oil and the flames instantaneously enveloped the train, which dashed down a steep grade 100 feet to the mile at the rate of 45 miles an hour. There were about forty passengers on board, who be came extremely panicky and jumped from the windows and doors into the snow, which was three feet deep. The doomed victims crowded the doors, blockading the passage ways. At a curve, half a mile from where the flames seized the fated train, the engine and cars were derailed. Three women named Kitty Moran, Mrs. Lewis Fair and Mrs. Connelly or Jones were burned to death. Fifteen men and one boy were burned and wounded. The engineer and fireman jumped from the train. The former, Patsey Sexton, was badly burned about the face and hands and will likely die. He made himself a hero by standing by his engine in the face of certain death. The wounded are being taken care of by President Carter and Superintendent Williams. who have a full corps of physicians and attendants. They are being brought to Bradford and lodged in hotels. The passenger coach is entirely consumed and the baggage car partially destroyed. The mails and baggage were partly saved. The baggage master and express messenger jumped from the train and escaped with a few injuries. The arms and legs of victims were burned off. Many of the wounded are in a critical condition and four or five, according to the opinion of physicians, will die. The burning train, as it dashed down the moun tain side was an appalling sight, nearly unnerving those who witness-
