Philadelphia Times: Although it is nearly three months since John C. New did any work in the Treasury Department at Washington, only a week has passed since he stopped drawing pay.

New York Herald: Mr. Tilden never was that man physically who caused the belief that he was strong of constitution.

The citizens of Piedmont are discussing the construction of a narrow gauge railroad from that stirring town to Madison, by which they can easily make connection with the Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley road, which will run not far from Madison.

It is said that the charges preferred against General Swain by Banker Bateman, who is John Sherman's partner in business, grew out of some transactions connected with a little game of draw poker.

THE OTHER SIDE. A Meeting Which was not Fully Understood nor Entirely Unanimous.

According to a notice given on the old hickory tree in front of the church on last Sunday, a large and anxious assemblage of the citizens of the old congregation were to be seen at the meeting.

Next in order was an investigating committee. After much trouble it was secured, composed of the following: Capt. J. D. Whitley, J. R. McAuley, J. W. Moore, Dr. Craven, and H. A. Grey, school teacher.

In the meantime the meeting was an animated discussion by Mr. Davidson and Mr. Grey. Mr. Davidson seemed determined, if possible, to find out and let the ignorant know what the object of the meeting was.

The committee, after being out some time, returned with two reports—a majority and a minority report, with resolutions compelling our net candidates to the Legislature to pledge themselves that they will pass laws making our high sheriff and deputies more stringent, vigilant and powerful, so that the prisoners of the county shall not escape justice.

After quite a pleasant evening and good feeling generally, and about an equally divided vote of the terror-stricken and inter-tribe, the meeting adjourned subject to the call of the chairman. Resolutions were also passed requesting that the proceedings be published in the Observer and the Home & Democrat.

Fifty Thousand Majority. NEW ORLEANS, April 25.—Returns so far as made from various sections of the State indicate a majority of ten thousand for the Democratic State ticket and the adoption of all the constitutional amendments. The returns for the city are not yet completed. The majority for the regular Democratic ticket now approximates fifteen thousand.

The Vote in Orleans. NEW ORLEANS, April 25.—The official returns of the parish of Orleans vote for Governor gave McKenry (Dem.) 10,800, and Stevenson (Rep.) 6,886, and two precincts to hear from.

WASHINGTON.

JUDGE BENNETT DELIVERS A POWERFUL SPEECH.

A Conference upon the Internal Revenue Question and a Programme Agreed Upon—Dowd Takes the Floor.

WASHINGTON, April 25.—The Democratic members of Congress from North Carolina, including the Senators, met for consultation with the friends of internal revenue reform, this morning, at the room of the House committee on elections. The chief purpose of the conference was the appointment of a committee to prepare a bill to be submitted to the ways and means committee. The result was the choice on such committee of the following gentlemen: Judge Bennett, chairman; Mr. Candler, (Georgia); Mr. Dibble (S. C.); Gen. Dibrell, (Tennessee); and Mr. C. A. Tamm, (Virginia).

It is expected that this committee will very soon have a measure ready which will secure the co-operation of the committee on ways and means to pass the House. It is understood that the Speaker and the Western revenue reformers do not desire the passage of a bill previous to action on the tariff bill, and that they will oppose any such legislation if the tariff bill falls in the House.

The telegraph informs you that Judge Bennett, Representative at large, spoke to-day on the Wood-Peters matter in election case. It is not likely that it does more than state the bare outlines of his minority report in favor of Wood, who was beaten by 16,000 votes, or at least the leading points in his supporting speech. The argument was strictly technical, and the learned speaker thoroughly serious. Yet, notwithstanding the House and Senate had been in a monotonous harangue, read from Wood in his own behalf, and another harangue somewhat better by Peters, the Republican sitting member, it was in a particularly good humor when Judge Bennett began. It was in a still more pleasant mood as he proceeded hour by hour, trumpet tongued, and with his sleeves rolled up. He did not exactly make Mr. Cox's head in the line of his demonstration, but he showed what he could do if he were disposed. After consuming his hour, the House extended his time. He spoke to some length further, and complaining of fatigue, asked that he be "indulged in a breathing spell" while Mr. Springer should address the House.

At the conclusion of Springer's remarks the Judge resumed with renewed powers. Again the sands of his hour glass ran out, and Mr. Hall, of the elections committee, generously yielded to the gentleman from North Carolina all the time he required. I have not undertaken to follow Judge Bennett in his great argument so remarkable for its law, logic and literary content, manner of delivery and effect on his audience. I have been content to play on the surface of general statement. The Record will show what was in it; I am unable to describe the manner of its delivery, or the manner of its acceptance.

In his pronunciation Judge Bennett follows the English mode, both as to proper names and ordinary words. For instance, he says clerk, Lord Cook (Coke); and he is more of a precision, if possible, than either Senator Bayard or Gov. Long, in giving the correct sound to the word "lawyer." This afternoon when the Judge was speaking, Lyman, of Massachusetts, interrupted him with a critical remark. Judge Bennett alluded to his interlocutor in reply as a "wandering encyclopedia of the dead languages."

Maj Dowd's joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to lend to the city of Charlotte for the 19th celebration of the Declaration of Independence, two hundred flags of the United States was introduced early in to-day's session of the House, and passed without objection from the members present.

So far it is understood that three North Carolina members desire to be heard on the tariff bill: Messrs Bennett, Cox and Green.

Miss Lyman, sister of the wife of Gen. W. R. Cox, is here on a visit.

A WOMAN'S SAD STORY.

Mrs. Miller, Once Wealthy and Respected, Convicted of Petty Thieving.

A middle-aged woman, poorly dressed and dissipated-looking, but still with a bit of brown breeding and great beauty, sat in the Quarter Sessions dock yesterday, charged with the larceny of some trifling wearing apparel. Her plain black dress was faded and bedraggled, and her head was covered with an old summer hat of black straw, trimmed with a bit of brown ribbon. Her manner was very quiet. Her hands, clasped together, rested in her lap. Tears chased one another rapidly down her cheeks. She was indicted near the close of the afternoon. She said that the clothes, tied up in a bundle, had been given her to carry by a woman whom she became acquainted with while she was in prison for larceny and theft. She did not know where they had come from. The jury, nevertheless, returned a verdict of guilty, and the woman was taken to the county jail by Judge Mitchell thirty days.

The name of Margaret Miller was an assumed one. The woman once lived on Arch street and moved in the most exclusive society. Her husband, now dead, was widely known. She has two sons, one of whom is an officer of a national bank; the other has an extensive medical practice. The woman was fallen into habits of idleness and extravagance, and run through her estate. She dreaded that her name might become known and her shame fall upon her children. No one came near her in court. She was, however, provided with a lawyer. The lawyer's fee was paid by a well-known and elegantly dressed society man.

THE LANGUAGE OF CATS.

Though Limited as to Words It is Copious in Expression.

New York Times. A little learning is a particularly dangerous thing in connection with a comparative philology. This was illustrated the other day by an article in the London News on the language of cats. In that article it was asserted that "the cat has a speech in which all the vowels of the dog are, with six consonants into the bargain, they being "m, n, g, h, y, and f." This assertion, made in a cat generally, is absurdly untrue. It is true, in part, of the tortoise-shell dialect—a dialect which is confined to perhaps one-ninth of the entire cat family—it is even the tortoise-shell cat does not make use of "f," and it is doubtful if the tortoise shell dialect, except in regions where it is seriously corrupted, ever uses the brindle patois, the vowel "u" exists.

The purest of all cat dialects is the black cat dialect, which bears to other cat dialects the same relation that the Italian dialects bear to the principal dialects of Italy. There is practically only one dog language, and although some differences of pronunciation distinguish the speech of Scotch terriers from that of the Newfoundland dogs, these differences cannot be regarded as dialects. Now, the dog does not make use of "e," and inasmuch as all cats, except the tortoise shell variety, make use of the vowels, it is erroneous to say that the speech of the cat has "all the vowels of the dog." The vowel "e," which no dog can pronounce, is the most prominent vowel in the feline word "meow"—pronounced "mow" in tortoise-shell. The writer in the London News may be confidently challenged to produce a single dog capable of being taught to say "meow."

Cats use the six consonants above mentioned, but they also use vowels. The word "pzzmew" meaning "I am," certainly contains the consonants "p" and "z," even if we class the final "w" as a vowel sound. Again, the consonant "sh" appears in the familiar expression "sha," which is used by all cats in moments of excitement, but which is too profane to be translated in these columns. "Meoww," meaning "Let me in," is not to be confounded with "meow," the second plural of the verb, and meaning "to give dinner," and it mistakenly contains the letter "w."

The word "ack," which is usually pronounced so indistinctly as to be understood by the cat, is a common exclamation, but which is too profane to be translated in these columns. "Meoww," meaning "Let me in," is not to be confounded with "meow," the second plural of the verb, and meaning "to give dinner," and it mistakenly contains the letter "w."

Want of space forbids the further consideration of this important and interesting subject. It may, however, be added that Prof. Wilder, who has recently made a profound study of the curious tortoise-shell dialect, has found in it many resemblances to the Basque, and is inclined to regard it not as a dialect, but as a distinct language, in no way related to the great Woodsheddoo-Backfenian family of cat languages.

The Value of Manual Training Schools.

Scientific American. A contemporary writer says it is principally because of the conceit of weak and foolish parents who could not think of allowing their boys to soil their hands with manual labor or their feet in the mud of the streets with common workmen, that so many useless people exist. Many and many a young man have known those aptitudes called him "with all the manual training schools in the world learn a trade, but he was prevented from doing so by his parents, who preferred to see him filling the more honorable position of a clerk, or a day for $15 per month, and sometimes yielding to the small temptations to leave unpaid his tailor's and washer's bills. Or, if he escaped the clerkship, he was almost sure to be found among the luckless ninety-and-nine professional men who stand off and eye with green envy the one in a hundred tradesman who has made a success. It is not the lack of attention to the new workmen that is lowering the standard in mechanical trades, but the folly of parents in closing the doors of the trades in the face of their sons, and in the absence of good material we get bad. It is very often the case that we get hold of a boy who has few or no qualifications, natural or acquired, for a trade, but he can probably make more money at that than at common labor, and as we can not better, we have to do the best we can. There is no doubt we are getting poorer subjects each year for apprentices for this very reason. But we can reach a point so low that it is impossible to get any lower, and I believe we have about reached that point in some lines of business. Some parents, and boys too, are at last getting their eyes opened. They are learning that they can get paid for their labor, and that many bubbles have been pricked and much gilding has been washed away. Labor is becoming more dignified, and more respected, and more valued, than it ever was before. The manual training schools which are springing up in nearly all of our large cities are giving instruction to many boys whose parents, perhaps, would not at first consent to their entering the shops. These schools are doing a good work in teaching the principles of trades, in fostering a genuine love for mechanics, and in pointing out the way to the special field where the young man can labor with the assurance of receiving his highest reward. With such brightening prospects as the work of the manual training school warrants, we see no reason for fearing that the race of good workmen in any trade will soon die out. On the contrary, we believe we will see mechanical engineering in numbers and skill from year to year.

The Future of Texas.

Ex-Governor Hubbard, of Texas, is quoted as saying: "Our State is entering upon an era of unexampled prosperity. Investment invites the grain language of the entire West to be brought to her gates for foreign shipment. The export trade is just waking up to the fact that Galveston is 800 miles nearer Kansas City than New York is. We raise now one quarter of the cotton crop of the United States. In a few years we shall double our present production. Manufacturers are springing up on every side. We shall get the cream of the rich trade now beginning to flow between our country and Mexico. We used to spend $200,000 a year in protecting our frontier. That money now goes toward the endowment of free schools."

High License and Beer vs. Prohibition.

The Bangor (Me.) Commercial says that ex-Chief Justice John Appleton, of the Supreme Court of Maine, has frequently declared that while the prohibitory law may have worked well in the country towns, he was inclined to believe that a high license law would work better in the cities. He also said that he regarded the inclusion of lager beer in the prohibitory statute as a great mistake. The opinions of Judge Appleton, says the Commercial, "are well understood here, and we do not understand that he has manifested the slightest disposition to qualify or retract them."

An Insurer's Idea.

Danver Opinion. A little 4-year old said to his mother last week, "Mother, I believe God thinks I'm dead." "Why?" asked the mother somewhat astonished at the remark, "Cause I haven't said my prayers for a week."

When you come to think of it, it is not odd that literary people prefer a cigar to a pipe. It is a healthier to smoke when they are writing, and it is more convenient. And then it gives them the true essence of the tobacco.

The most favored smokers among all nations and all places of men agree that the tobacco grown on the Golden Tobacco Belt of North Carolina is the most delicious and refined in the world. It is not like the Turkish, more fragrant than Havana, than any other, and it is just what the connoisseur craves and the habitual smoker demands.
