so desired, it also unquestionably had the right to revise the action of the national committee in this matter, and make a chairman of its own choice.

Drummond, of Maine, moved that when the vote was taken, it be by a call of the roll of States.

Stewart, of Pennsylvania, objected to the action of the committee in the selection of Clayton in an eloquent appeal, which was greeted with long continued applause.

Hor, of Michigan, argued that the question should be settled, not by a call of the roll, but by a call of the States. This convention could do in a half hour what it could not do in the other way in one hour and a half.

Prentiss, of Missouri, could not understand the object of the proposition to call the roll of States.

The refusal to endorse that nomination would go forward as a stigma on the man who was to be honored. As a citizen, soldier and statesman Powell Clayton bore the mark of his love for the national flag.

Theodore Roosevelt, of New York, favored the motion of Lodge. It was the action of the committee. There were but two delegates to the convention who held seats in the national committee, and the convention should not be governed in such an important matter by the action of a body of outsiders.

He hoped that the vote would be taken by a call of the delegates. It was a fitting thing for the convention to select the man of its own choice. He hoped that Lynch would be elected temporary chairman of the convention.

Canon, of Illinois, argued that the question to be considered was not the action of the national committee, but the action of the Republican party. If the national committee had failed in this, should he set aside otherwise it should be sustained.

Was not Clayton a fit man to preside temporarily? He was known to many of them, and they were willing that a stigma should be placed upon the man who had so bravely carried the banner of the national committee. They felt that it would not be proper to go before the country to sustain the candidate of a convention which had acted had been to put down a man who carried an empty sash.

A delegate from South Carolina, advised the nomination of Lynch, but without meaning thereby any reflection upon Clayton. As a Southern Republican he wished the election of Lynch.

Winnam, of North Carolina, supposed that the action of national committee had no more force than a mere recommendation, and with all courtesy to the committee he would say that he preferred somebody else.

Having served under the national flag, but were eight millions of colored men in the country who desired recognition at the hands of the convention. Copy and his name had appealed to the nation in their behalf, and would not appeal in vain.

Reed of Maryland, favored a full and free discussion of the question. He himself carried an empty sash, but he carried besides a heart true to the Republican party, and he believed it to be the best interests of that party to elect Lynch as its temporary chairman.

Thurston of Nebraska, expressed the idea that if it was the intention to overturn the action of the national committee, it should not be done until the next year.

Benjamin, of Arkansas, sustained Powell Clayton, as a man who had done his duty, and as a Southern Republican to elevate the Republican cause in the South.

The chairman quoted approvingly a decision of Senator Hoar, in the absence of any rule the method of taking a question must rest in the sound discretion of the chair, subject of course to the action of the convention.

This was emphatically, he said, a convention of the people, and every delegate had an undoubted right to a free expression of his opinion, and to have his vote recorded.

The roll of delegates was then proceeded with when it was announced that Lynch had 431 votes and was elected temporary chairman.

A scene of the wildest confusion ensued, the delegates rising in their seats, cheered, swinging their arms, and the spectators joined in the demonstration.

The vote was then made unanimous. The chair appointed Clayton, of Arkansas, Lodge, of Massachusetts, and W. N. Toft, of South Carolina, a committee to escort Lynch to the chair.

As the committee appeared the applause and cheering subsided, and the feeling of disappointment seemed to disappear.

Lynch made a good impression by his quiet and modest demeanor. The chairman said that it was the honor and great pleasure of presenting to the convention as its temporary chairman Hon. J. R. Lynch, of Mississippi.

He, the chair, said: Gentlemen of the convention! I feel that I ought not to say that I thank you for the distinguished honor you have conferred upon me, for I do not.

As the chairman said that I should not be a patriot should fall to respond to his country's call, and that no loyal member of his party should fail to comply with the demands of his party, I yield with a glad heart to the decision and assume the duties of the position to which you have assigned me.

Every member of this convention has a right to be satisfied with the subject within the last few hours known that this position was neither expected or desired by me.

If there ever was any such thing as a man having honor thrust upon him, I have an exemplification of it in this instance. (Laughter and applause.) I came to this convention not for the purpose of securing the defeat of any man or of any man, but for the purpose of contributing to the extent of my vote and my influence to make Republican success in November next an assured fact. (Cheers.) I hope that the delegates to this convention will be so wise as to give to this nation through its chosen representatives in this hall will so shape its platform and will present such candidates before the American people as will be a reflection upon the shadow of a doubt. So far as the candidates for the Presidential nomination are concerned, I do not wish any gentleman to feel that my election by your votes is indicative of anything relative to a preference of one candidate over another.

I am prepared, and I hope that every member of this convention is prepared, to return to his home with an unshaken confidence in the wisdom of the candidates of this convention, a loyal and hearty support who ever they may be. (Cheers.) I am satisfied in my own mind that when we go before the people, the country's action will be satisfactory. Because the great heart of the American people will never consent to have a political party gain the ascendancy in this government, whose chief reliance is on a fraudulent ballot, and violence at the polls. (Applause.) I am satisfied that the people of this country are too loyal ever to allow a man to be inaugurated President whose title to the position is brought forth in frauds. I am satisfied that the American people will ratify our action, because they will never consent to have a revenue system for government other than one that will not only raise the necessary revenue for its support, but will also be sufficient to protect every American citizen in his business. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, not for myself, but perhaps in obedience, to custom I thank you for the honor you have conferred upon me.

The chairman of the convention then announced the names of the persons selected to serve on the various committees of the convention.

Several memorials and resolutions were presented and appropriately referred, after which the convention at 4:45 p. m. adjourned until 11 a. m. to-morrow.

After carefully studying the vote on the question of temporary chairman it does not appear to have been a test of strength, as some delegates voted for Clayton with a view of sustaining the action of the national committee, leaving the other questions to be decided later, while others voted for Lynch, with a view to its effect on the colored vote.

Blaine and Logan men after the vote estimated that they had greater strength than they had before supposed, while the adherents of the independent and "dark horses" seem to feel satisfied with the position which they hold between the main contesting forces.

Who is Mrs. Winslow? As this question is frequently asked, we will say that she is a lady who for years of thirty years has unflinchingly devoted her time and talents as a female physician and nurse, principally among children, who has, as a result of this effort, and practical knowledge, obtained in a lifetime upon a nurse and physician, she has composed a soothing syrup for children, which is now sold in every drug store.
