OPPOSING INVESTIGATION.

Wednesday in the House of Representatives Congressman Hewitt, of New York, introduced a resolution asking for the appointment of a committee to investigate into the expenditures of the several departments of the government, to ascertain as to the truth of the charges of corruption against several departments, to enquire whether there was need of further legislation to promote the integrity, efficiency, etc. of their administration in the public interests. It was a resolution that meant business, and would not doubt, if adopted, have resulted in bringing to light no small amount of crookedness. Hiscock, of New York, objected to the resolution, and on his objection it failed.

They found no trouble in getting Republican support for the political investigations proposed by John Sherman to inquire into alleged outrages in the State of Virginia and in Mississippi, in which thousands of dollars were expended in paying to bring witnesses from all portions of Virginia to furnish a campaign document to be used in the coming campaign. And, yet these disturbances were purely State matters, with which the Congress of the United States had nothing to do. There was a prospect of political capital in the investigations, however, and that insured Republican support and a sufficient appropriation for the purpose.

But the Republicans in Congress profess to be civil service reformers. They profess to desire an honest administration of their affairs by the man who preside over the respective departments in Washington and their subordinates. They are loud in their complaints on all this, but when it comes to putting it into practice, and to ascertaining how the agents entrusted with the administration of public affairs are performing their duties, the alacrity which they show in objecting is astonishing. In the investigation, however, of clerks charged with shortcomings they are not so hostile, for the shortcomings of the clerks are not so apt to hurt the party. Experience has demonstrated one thing to the full satisfaction of every one who has noticed the drift of proceedings in Washington, and that is that there never will be a thorough investigation of Republican methods in the administration of the government, if Republican votes can prevent it, and that investigation never will be made while Republican influences predominate. The books never will be opened and fully examined until they come into Democratic hands, and if the public want them opened, and want to find out how the balance sheet stands, where their money has gone to, and what for, they must select a new set of bookkeepers. But the books will not show all this, for millions have been squandered and stolen of which there is no record on the books, and which can only be traced up by a thorough and searching investigation. No people in the world have been as mercilessly plundered as the American people since the Republican party came into power.

We are somewhat curious to know at what particular time in Dr. York's existence he ceased to be a Liberal Democrat and became a Republican. He was elected as a Liberal Democrat for him so voted under the impression that he was a Democrat—as he put it, a better Democrat than those who opposed him—and now they are informed by himself that he is not a Liberal Democrat, but a Republican, that he endorses the Republican platform and Blaine and Logan. Perhaps some of his constituents would like to know just when this political metamorphosis took place and the particular influences that were used in bringing it about. Dr. York's admirers inform us that he is not only a giant in stature but a giant in intellect. Some gigantic influences must have got away with him.

Gen. Palmer said in his speech before the Illinois Democratic convention that if he had the power of Him who bade Lazarus to come forth, he would say "Mr. Tilden" come forth. This mixing up of Lazarus and Tilden may seem all right to them, but we confess we can't take to the Lazarus idea with first class cordiality.

While Georgia boasts of her electrical girls, Alabama comes to the front with her dynamite man. He is so charged with dynamite that he is in constant danger of exploding.

When the following times approaches, and Congress is called to get away from Washington, it is remarkable how many of our members can be seen in the streets of the city, and how many of them are seen in the streets of the city, and how many of them are seen in the streets of the city.

The President Wednesday vetoed the Fitz John Porter bill.

While John Kelly professes to desire the nomination of Bayard, his candidate is Flower. If he can't get Flower, his next choice is Ben Butler, and if he can't get Butler, he will take Bayard, or perhaps anything he can get.

The Banner-Enterprise, colored organ, published at Wilmington, asks the following conundrum: "If it takes Mr. York and his friends two months to write a short letter of acceptance, how long will it take him to be elected Governor?"

NORTH CAROLINA.

Her Resources and Industries as Viewed by a Massachusetts Colored Man.

Since the exposition was held in Boston in 1883 there is no State in the Union spoken of so often as North Carolina. Her resources, her industries, her glorying accounts given of it as the State of North Carolina. That exhibition of North Carolina showed to the world the different ores, minerals, woods, etc., that are so valuable to other States, and at what low rates such can be bought in North Carolina. Should not the people of sister States with little or no facilities of their kind, turn to North Carolina as they are doing, and add to their wealth, besides benefitting the people generally in that section of country?

North Carolina has counties amply supplied with mines of gold, silver and copper ore. Coal is not so abundant as in some other States, but the great variety of wood amply supplied with iron, and the iron feet woods are shipped to various States where, mechanics inform me, they would not thrive to the extent they do without several of the hard woods springing from North Carolina. The States and the greater portion coming from North Carolina, which are used so extensively in their cabinet and machine shops, and the wood used in the building of steam engines, they have met with (as at present the demand is great), were it not for the abundance received at such low rates and coming mainly from North Carolina. There is no State east of the Mississippi that can equal North Carolina in the number and specimens of fine woods. Many of these woods are used for the covers of book presses, hand spikes, capstans, bars, bows, hoops, spikes, handles, etc.

The white hickory, found in the mountains, is not so common as in almost any other in the world, so say some of the experts, and its capacity for high polish seems equal to almost any other wood on hand. It is almost unlimited space naming the different kinds of wood, but that would be useless, as there has already been a great deal said on that subject.

There are ores to be found in the State such as copper, iron and lead. Useful minerals are no secondary consideration in connection with this State, such as mica, chromatic iron, and alumina. There is also a large deposit of stone, agalmatolite, millstone, grindstone, grits, graphite, limestone, marble, talc, serpentine, baryte, soapstone, etc.

The fish that frequent this coast are equal in variety to those of any State in the South, and a great many are shipped to some of the largest cities in the Union, say nothing of the shell fish, such as oysters, crabs, clams, etc.

Raleigh, the capital of the State, is a nice little city, with a population of about 10,000. The larger one is owned by the white and the other is rented by the colored people who have been very successful in their undertaking from the city.

The State seems to be provided with different institutions, sustained by the State, such as an insane asylum and a blind asylum, and a deaf and dumb school. Institutions of learning seem quite numerous and generally well patronized by pupils from different parts of the State.

The first public park visited was the State house, where it was nice and cool, as most stone and brick buildings are during the summer months, and during the summer months, when the sun is hot and the air is warm, the State house is a very nice place to visit.

The next place of interest we visited was the agricultural department, where we were kindly met by Mr. Harris and afterwards by Mr. John Kirkpatrick, who seemed to take pleasure in showing us all the articles on exhibition from different parts of the State, which they were and the best of most profitable uses that that could be made of them, etc.

The next place we visited was the Institute of Agriculture, where we were kindly met by Dr. Fuller, a second Chamberlain, who greeted us with a smile and invited us into the reception room. After having there for a short time we were very conducted all through the building by Dr. Fuller, where we saw nearly all the inmates employed in making bed-quilts, each looking neat and crisp, and nearly all of them spoke to the Doctor very kindly as they passed, causing us to believe he was quite a favorite with them. After many kindly wishes were expressed for his future success we parted, hoping to visit that institution at some future time.

The Democratic Ticket.

The Banner-Enterprise, colored organ, published at Wilmington, speaks of the Democratic ticket, saying: "To say other than that the Democratic ticket nominated by the Democrats is a strong one, would be an attempt to misguide the ignorant. The ticket was every element of strength that could have been brought together. Gen. Seales is a high tariff advocate, and that will make him less objectionable to Republicans. Under present circumstances—a Democratic ticket against a Democrat on either side—you can't beat the ticket, and there is no use in trying to disguise the fact."

Recognizing El Mahdi.

CAIRO, July 3.—El Pazar, the greatest Mohammedan university after the secret convulsion, has pronounced it in favor of the Mahdi's religious claims. El Pazar had heretofore denied Mahdi's pretensions. This decision is believed, will have important influence with Zimousi and other tribes.

Wilmington, N. C., July 3.—The Wilmington Banner-Enterprise, (colored organ) in former years when campaign clubs were organized by the Republicans, the candidates for President, Vice President and Governor, and some times Lieut. Governor formed the name of the club. We have seen several calls for the organization of clubs within the last one or two weeks, but York is left in the cold. What does it mean? Alas! for poor York!

Six Thousand Refugees.

MARSEILLES, July 3.—At 8 o'clock this morning three deaths from cholera had been reported since last night. At least 6,000 of the inhabitants have fled from the city. Four hundred poor workmen from Toulon have been sent back to that city.
