It preferred another candidate for the Presidency, and has not entirely gotten over the soreness of defeat, but it recognizes the fact that Gov. Cleveland has qualities that entitle him to popular confidence and support. In answer to an inquiry from a correspondent as to whether Governor Cleveland was qualified to fill the office of President, it replies that if judged by the standard of good men who have been President, such as Washington, Jefferson, Jackson and Lincoln, he will not come up to the full measure of greatness, but adds: Mr. Cleveland has two qualities.
