NORTH CAROLINA'S CREDIT.

Just prior to the war North Carolina's debt was about $6,000,000.

The debt had been honestly contracted and expended in building railroads.

Honestly and judiciously expended. The war came, and Chaos followed in its wake. North Carolina, like the lion that she was and is, shook the dewdrops of lethargy from her mane, and addressed herself to the new state of affairs.

All had been changed. Six hundred thousand slaves had been set free.

These slaves represented one hundred millions of dollars, which had been swept away as if by magic.

The people, individually, had lost, but

The former slaves were still in the State, and

Still valuable as a taxable, producing attribute.

The radical party, under the peculiar condition of affairs, got control of the Legislature, and the State government.

They piled the debt mountain high. The new debt was ostensibly created to aid new railroad enterprises, but

If a single half mile of new road was built,

A microscope of intense magnifying power could not find it to-day.

The Democratic party came into power in 1870.

They said we don't owe this debt, thus fraudulently contracted.

They appointed a committee to ascertain what the debt was.

How much of it had been legally contracted.

How much of it had been fairly expended.

How much of it was honest.

How much of it had inured to the advantage of the State.

The matter was discussed in the newspapers, the censors of public opinion.

It was discussed in the forum, On the rostrum,

In the Legislature.

Candidates were put up and run for office on the issue of the State debt.

All of which

Finally resulted in the passage of a bill by the Legislature, compromising in a fair, equitable manner the debt that was declared to be honest, and

The adoption of a constitutional amendment by the voters of the State, repudiating the "special tax," or fraudulent debt.

The recognized debt has been nearly all funded under the provisions of the bill, and

The State debt is no longer an incubus.

The recognized debt was divided into four classes.

The mortgage, or construction bonds, on the North Carolina railroad were funded at par.

Another class at 40 per cent. on the dollar.

Another class at 25 per cent. on the dollar.

Another class at 15 per cent. on the dollar.

Everybody except the holders of the "special tax" bonds thought the proposition of the State was equitable.

As a result, the credit of the State was never better than it is to-day.

The new bonds are very hard to get, and very few of them are on the market.

Whenever and Wherever

FREDERICK A. PRINCE.

At the State Convention of Massachusetts Democrats, held at Worcester last Wednesday, this gentleman was nominated as the candidate of the Democratic party for governor of Massachusetts.

Mr. Prince was born in Boston, January 18th, 1818. He graduated from Harvard in 1836. He studied law and was admitted to the Suffolk bar. He was elected mayor in 1877, by the Democrats. Though defeated in 1878, he was again elected in 1879. His administration was a signal success, and he was re-elected in 1880 and again in 1881. For several years Mr. Prince has been the secretary of the Democratic National Committee, and a regular delegate to the National Convention.

A CRANK AT THE WHITE HOUSE.

Wants to Run the Navy Department and Astonish the World With His Wisdom.

A Washington special says: short, slight, swarthy-complexioned man dressed in the plain, rough clothes of a workman, rang the bell of the front door of the White House, this afternoon. His rusty dress was made to look still dingier by the clear, clean color of a light blue brocaded silk scarf, which was tied in a sailor's knot around his seemed and wrinkled neck. When the door of the White House was opened, the caller demanded to see the President. He said coolly and quietly, in the expressive vocabulary of the most fluent of talkers, that he desired to take command of the navy of the United States; that he had worked his brain in some mysterious way so as to affect the result at Chicago last year. If it had not been for him Mr. Cleveland could not have been nominated, and if it had not been for his system of mathematical combination further carried out he could not have been elected. He said with firmness: "I want it distinctly understood that I am not a mugwump. I am a Democrat. If I am placed in command of the navy of the United States this afternoon, by tomorrow afternoon at this time there will not be a single Republican left in the service."

Cergeant Dinsmore shut the door in the midst of this talk. He told the caller to write to the President upon the subject. The man walked away very indignant. He said at the outer gate:

"I have ordered out Companies B and J to bring the President out of the White House, where I can get at him and tell him what I want. I can soon show him what to do. Besides having secured his election and being entitled to the position on that ground, I should have full control of this administration on account of my scholastic abilities. I am the greatest scholar in the world and the only poet left. I can put all the knowledge there is upon this globe into forms of poetry which will dazzle, instruct and enchant every one."

As Companies B and J had not made their appearance late in the afternoon, it is probable that the future commander of the navy will next bombard the President through the mails.

Uses of Cotton Seed Oil.

Memphis Appeal.

To those who remember when cotton seed was a "nuisance" about a plantation, assawdust is about a saw-mill, there is something almost miraculous about the numerous and valuable uses to which it is put at the present day. Had any one only a generation ago proclaimed that the article of which the unsightly and unsavory heaps that surrounded the gin-house were composed should, in the lifetime of the lookers-on, become a valuable food for man and beast, an article of merchandise consumed all over the broad Union and shipped off to foreign lands, becoming a serious rival to one of the principal products of sunny Italy, he would have been regarded as a deluded imbecile. Yet such a prediction would have been true to the letter. Putting aside the other products, and regarding the oil alone, we find that article extensively used at the table instead of olive oil; used in making soap, in mixing paints, in making putty, in the manufacture of butterine and in refining lard; superseding lard in cookery, used by confectioners, by bakers, by screw-cutters and many other manufacturers; by druggists in some of their processes, by soap-makers in their finest productions; by miners, as a non-explosive light-giver, and in many other ways to the extent of 20,000,000 gallons a year. As an article of food cotton seed oil has 95 per cent of nutriment. In the English and French armies it is esteemed as the most valuable and wholesome of fatty food products. In France it is much used at the table with cereals instead of meat, and it forms a part of the army rations there. In the northern countries, especially in Siberia, it is coming into exclusive use in food, fatty substances being great necessities in northern climates. It is also coming into use instead of cod-liver oil, proving to be a restorer of animal vigor of especial value to consumptives and to persons suffering from emaciation and wasting away. As time goes on still new uses are found for cotton seed oil.
