CATTLE AND FRUIT.

The Baltimore Sun calls attention to the fact, as an evidence of the progress of Western North Carolina, of the increased shipment North and South of cattle and apples. The latter are shipped Southward, where, on account of their superior size and quality they are in demand. This business we might say has just begun, and there is no good reason why it should not become immense within the course of a few years. As a range for cattle, there are no finer grass lands in the world than the mountain sides and the valleys of Western North Carolina, where timothy and clover with half a chance grow shoulder high, and other grasses of various kinds, of spontaneous growth, grow in the greatest abundance. The winters are not severe enough to make housing cattle and much hand feeding a necessity, thus leaving more profit to the cattle raiser and less labor than to the cattle men of the Western and Northern States, where the summers are short and the winters long and severe. The Northern and Western cattle raiser has the advantage so far of ready markets in the great cities, and of cheap transportation on account of numerous competing railroads, which compete for business and give rates which the Western North Carolina cattle raiser cannot expect for some time to come. But considering his other advantages he can stand a higher shipping rate than they can. But there will be improvement in this respect as new lines of railroad are built and closer and more numerous connections formed North and South, in addition to which there is a disposition on the part of the management of the Western North Carolina railroad, upon which the mountain country is now dependent for outlet to the markets of the world, to encourage the people along their line of road to engage in new industries by giving as low rates as they can afford to give at present.

Within the past few years considerable attention has been given to the improvement of stock throughout this State, and the result is strikingly visible in the stock exhibits of our agricultural fairs. Farmers are learning that fine stock are cheaper in the end than scrubs, and much more profitable when put upon the market. It costs but little more, if anything, to care for and put upon the market a thousand pound beef than a five hundred pound scrub that no butcher wants to waste time on slaughtering and dressing if he can get anything better at a better price.

There is no reason why Western North Carolina should not also ship large numbers hogs and sheep. The dog is in the way of the latter there as he is in other parts of North Carolina, but the time may come when a little common sense will be brought to bear on the dog question, and the sheep receive a measure of that protection to which it is entitled, and which it should have had long ago. It is somewhat remarkable that notwithstanding the fine quality of our mountain apples that we are dependent to such a great extent upon Northern orchards for supplies of this fruit. Considering the prices at which they sell, the ready and unlimited demand for good apples, there ought to be as much money in a well managed apple orchard as in a Florida orange grove. We are told that one of the reasons why our merchants seek the Northern apple in preference to our home raised fruit, whose excellence they recognize, is because of the carelessness with which much of it is handled and shipped, being shaken from the trees, bruised and damaged, instead of being picked and nicely packed for shipment as Northern orchard men do. This makes the Northern apple more presentable, makes it keep well, and consequently the purchaser incurs less risk in purchasing large quantities. As proof of this, we have seen barrels of splendid mountain apples shipped to Charlotte so carelessly packed and bruised that the undamaged ones was an exception. Of course they were not in demand, and probably realized such a return as to discourage the shipper from sending any more, when if he had taken ordinary care in picking and packing he would have been well paid for his apples and for his trouble. Experience is a teacher. Our western friends will learn how to manage these things better, in time, and not ruin by bad handling a fruit that with fair play will take first rank in the apple column.

A Chinese judge recently disposed of a case in which two women contended for the possession of an infant, each claiming it as hers, by ordering a ring to be drawn, the babe placed within it, the woman who succeeded in dragging it away from the other to have it. One, from affection, refused to scuffle over the child, and the judge awarded it to her.

Ex-Senator Stephen W. Dorsey is laying wires to go to the U. S. Senate from New Mexico, when that territory is admitted as a State. He has purchased a half interest in a leading Republican newspaper, through which he does his blowing.

The Ohio Prohibitionists had in the recent campaign thirty speakers from other States, and held three times as many meetings as the Democrats and Republicans together.

Mr. John C. New, of Indiana, late U. S. Treasurer, says he is not giving much attention to politics now, but is devoting his time to "morality, religion, and making money."

Defeated candidate Hoadly can take a rest, now. Perhaps Mr. Noyes sympathizes with him, and perhaps he don't.

Judge Foraker, Governor-elect of Ohio, is 39 years old.

ARCHBISHOP CORRIGAN.

The Successor of the Late Cardinal McCloskey.

The Most Reverend Michael Augustine Corrigan, Archbishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of New York, and the successor of the late Cardinal McCloskey, was born in Newark, New Jersey, August 13, 1840, of Irish parents. He was educated at St. Mary's, Emmetsburg. After his graduation, in 1859, he went to Europe, and was one of the twelve students with whom the American College in Rome was opened. He studied Italian and Hebrew for a year, and then began the study of theology. As a student he evidenced remarkable ability and energy, and won a number of medals in competition with the students of the Propaganda and of the Irish and Greek colleges. He was ordained priest in the Lateran Basilica on September 19, 1863, by Cardinal Patrizi, and a year before the completion of his course as a student of theology. This honor was conferred in recognition of his excellent conduct as a student. He was made a doctor of divinity in the year 1864, after a rigorous examination.

In the summer of the same year he returned to his native country, and was assigned by the late Archbishop Bayley, then Bishop of Newark, to the professorship of Dogmatic Theology and Sacred Scripture, and the directorship of the Ecclesiastical Seminary of Seton Hall College. He was made president of Seton Hall College in 1868. During Archbishop Bayley's stay in Rome in 1870, Dr. Corrigan was administrator and Vicar-General of the diocese. Three years after Pope Pius IX appointed him Bishop of Newark. Early in his episcopate he founded a reformatory for boys and women, and an asylum for the orphans of his diocese. Forty-two new churches were dedicated by him, and several religious communities founded. Up to 1876 Dr. Corrigan continued president of Seton Hall College. He was appointed Archbishop of Petra and Coadjutor-Archbishop with Cardinal McCloskey in 1880.

The Virginia Tobacco Crop.

The Danville (Va.) Register says: "farmers of Pittsylvania county are very busy cutting tobacco yet on the hill, and fires in many places are brightly burning. The proportion of tobacco now outstanding is much greater than many think, and the planters will be kept quite busy to get it out within the next few days. The curings are not so bright as the crop of last year. The crop is richer, has more body and will suit the manufacturer better than any crop for several years. Very little tobacco has been damaged by frost in the communities mentioned."
