EVIDENCE OF PROGRESS.

It is conceded by all that the Fair of the Carolina Fair Association has been a gratifying success, the exhibits being superior in number, variety and quality to those of any previous fair held on the grounds. Such a display gives even to the cursory observer ample evidence of the skill, thrift, genius, energy and enterprise of our people. It is not, however, to laud the fair, or to call attention to it in a general way that we write this article, but to note a few evidences of progress in the industrial arts upon which the South must depend for her future prosperity and wealth. If the South ever becomes the wealthy section which we believe she will in time become, it will be through diversified industries, not in the production of any particular staple or in the manufacture of any particular article, but by diversified agriculture, and diversified manufactures.

We know that the South has been in recent years making gratifying and steady progress in all the industrial arts, but few of us have a just conception of the character of that progress until the results are brought before our eyes in these industrial expositions, then whatever of doubts that might have been entertained as to her ability to compete in the contest for recognition with other countries and other sections vanish. As an illustration we may call attention to the display of manufactured cotton goods from the mills of the Messrs. McAden, which for excellence, neatness of design, for combination of colors, and beauty of finish, would do credit to any manufactory in the country. People who looked at that display of gingham, plaids, towels, shawls, &c., need never doubt more about the possible achievements of Southern looms, and it must be remembered that this is comparatively a new feature in the cotton manufacturing industry in this section, our mills having until within the past few years been content to work upon the more common and coarser lines of goods, leaving the finer kinds to the Northern mills. Now Southern made goods of this character not only find ready demand and market at home, but are eagerly sought for in Northern markets, right at the doors of the Northern manufacturers. If that be so now what will it be even within the next decade, when, with increased experience, skill, and more ample capital, our manufacturers will be placed upon a more equal footing with their northern rivals? If our manufacturers can hold their own now with all the obstacles they have had to contend against, and which have been overcome only by the greatest resolution and pluck, they will stand masters of the field then. We take special pleasure in noting these evidences of success and progress, for as a journalist and a citizen of this section, we have ever held that industrial development should be the chief aim of the Southern people, for in that path lay commercial independence, wealth and power, enabling her to be self sustaining and sole mistress of her own destinies. Every man who adds a new useful growth to the farm, invents a useful machine, makes a new useful implement, improves the character of flocks and herds, or the productive capacity of an acre of ground, shapes our forest timbers into articles for domestic use, casts and forges our iron into machinery and tools, weaves cotton, wool and silk into new fabrics, contributes that much to this grand and noble aim. He may not think so at the time, but he is doing it nevertheless.

A Knoxville dispatch announces the suspension of the Ore Hill copper mining works, in Ashe county, this State, when $1,500,000 had been invested. Other mines have also suspended. The Elk Knob, in Watauga, when $500,000 has been invested, will suspend. All this attributed to the low price of copper ore.

DIPLOMATIC SCANDALS.

A Washington Incident Which Recalls Many Disagreeable Memories.

New York Graphic.

The scandal which the secretary of the Chile legation has created by getting drunk and trying to raise a riot at the police station at Washington does not surprise people who know how the young man has carried on; and therefore others of the diplomatic corps in this city who occasionally do likewise. The Chilean secretary is a young man of excellent education, and belongs to one of the wealthiest and most aristocratic families in Chile, his father being the proprietor of a hacienda, or plantations of several hundred thousand acres, and quite prominent in politics.

But our people should not throw stones at him, for a late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Chile was in the habit of carrying on in the same way in the city of Santiago, and made a public spectacle of himself so often that there was not a respectable American in that country who would recognize the representative of his government. When this man was lying at the point of death the American residents of Valparaiso held a meeting, and after a long and exciting discussion decided by a mere majority to send a committee to see if they could render any assistance to his family, but his wife, soon after a widow, indignantly repulsed them and accepted aid from the other members of the diplomatic circle in Chile, the minister from Uruguay paying for the telegram which notified the United States government of his death.

The minister to Venezuela during the Garfield administration had a similar career, and came very near dying of delirium tremens in the police station at Caracas, but he recovered sufficiently to write his resignation when President Arthur asked for it. The citizens of the United States in Venezuela did everything they could to conceal his disgrace, and used to take turns in watching him and trying to keep him sober.

The hotel keepers and the gendarmes of Havana tell some very tall stories about the spree of a late consul-general of the United States at that place, and there's many a skipper sailing between New York and Cuba who has been compelled to wait days at a time before they could get him to sign their papers.

The secretary of legation at Rio de Janeiro a few years ago, under the Hayes administration, left a disgraceful record in that city, and will not be forgotten by many a tradesman who holds his bills.

Other cases of a similar sort could be cited to show that we should pull the beam out of our own eye before we come down too hard on the Chile secretary.

The Shedding Season.

Country Gentlemen.

If there is any one time of all the year when horses and poultry should have extra care, that time is now. At the moulting season the circulation is slow and weak; the whole system is debilitated; in fact, the animal in shedding is really, quite often, very sick. Many fine horses are lost at this time simply from neglect.

Timely attention will quite often bring a horse safely and comparatively comfortably through his autumn shedding, which, if neglected, will have quite a miserable time of it, and really be quite unfit for work. Every change of the temperature should be carefully watched, and the blanket and ventilation systematically attend to. The food should be of the strongest nature possible. Anything which will give warmth to the whole system should be fed in quantity consistent with good judgment. Good, sound, dry corn is of service to the horse and poultry just now. Corn should be fed from the last week in September to the middle of November.

The curry comb should not be used at all at shedding season. It irritates the skin, and quite often causes eruptions to appear, and other unpleasant symptoms. A good brushing will help the horse's circulation, and not irritate, but stimulate. Among other acts do not forget that of kindness. Even to an indisposed horse it gives great comfort.
