CLUVERIUS TO HANG.

A CANDIDATE FOR THE GAL-LOWS.

The Lower Court Sustained The Prisoner's Appearance.

THE OBSERVER at the time of the occurrence contained full details of the trial of Thomas S. Oluverius for the murder of Fannie Lillian Madison. As many of our readers have forgotten the details, we make the following re-statement of the occur-rence. On March 18th, 1885, at 3 o'cleck a m., Miss Fannis Lillian Madison arrived in Richmond from Bath county and went to the American Hotel, where she registered as "Miss F. L. Merton." Next morning her dead body was found in the old of Hollywood cemetery. On the 18th, near Little Plymouth, in the county of King and Queen, her first cousin, T. J. Cluverius (Kla veers), was arrested charged with the murder of the deceased. He waived an examination before the Police Justice, was indicted in April, and was brought to trial in the Hustings Court of Richmond at the May term. On the fourth day of June the jury returned a verdict of "guilty." The case went to the Court of Ap FINE BOOTS AND SHOES OF ALL GRADES peals, the decision of which we have already published by telegraph. We give the following particulars Silk, Soft and Stiff Hats, in regard to the present status of the Cluverius should answer with his life for the foul crime by him committed. It is therefore ordered that the case be not remand-ed for further hearing, but that the verdict of the hustings court of the city of Richmond be affirmed.

Judge Lacy stated that while he concurred in the general results of the opinion he did not agree with the opinion itself. Judge Hinton dissented entirely both in the opinion and the genera results. He stated that the corpus delicti had not been proven; that the admission of the Curtis letter was entirely wrong, and that from the introduction of that letter had sprung other matters in relation to the trial which warranted him in dissenting, and that be would write out his opinion and have it entered on re-

Judge Lewis stated that Judge Richardson was absent on account of indisposition, but that he concurred in the general results, but not in the

Although the court-room was crowded, there was an absence of rush or excitement. The fact that Cluverius would not be produced in court of course kept away many who would otherwise have been present. Nearly every member of the bar was in the room at some time or other during the reading of the opinion. At times Judge Fauntleroy was very impressive, and as he laid bare the facts as tadduced on the memorable trial, it seemed as if the voice of the public prosecutor was being heard again, many of the arguments and much of the language used being identical with those by which the elo quent Meredith and Aylett thrilled was b fore the hustings court.

Little or no surprise was manifested at the decision; in fact, public opinion had been very well settled upon the presumption that no new hearing would be granted. For over a week the air has been full of rumors that the court stood four to one against a new trial, and that two of the four disagreed only as to the certain particulars, and for once rumor was correct. How these facts leaked out is not known or whether it was out is not known, or whether it was only one of the lucky surmises of those who are supposed to know everything. After the reading of the opinion of the court, as expressed, had been arrived at after a very pa-tient and searching review of all the facts as set forth at the time of the trial, and was supported by copious quotations and references to the most learned and competent authorities. Thus is ended another act in the great tragedy which shocked a continent and for a time made Richmond unenviably famous.

Face to face with his fate Cluverius may be he cannot complain that the law has not thrown around him every safeguard and allowed him every chance to prove himself innocent of the dreadful charge that has been laid, and from the testimony it would seem brought to his door.

Cluverius knew what the decision of the court would be at least one hour before Judge Fauntleroy finished reading the opinion. The first few pages that were read indicated a decision unfavorable to the prisoner, and about half past 12 o'clock Mr. McGeorge, a feed dealer, doing business in Richmond, left the court room and went down to the jail. It was he who told Cluverius how the case would be decided, but it was after 2 o'clock before the prisoner was aware that the Supreme court had sustained the decision of the lower court in verius until after 2 o'clock. when Judge Crump and Mr. Beverly Crump, of counsel for the prisoner, arrived at the jail. Cluverius was in an up-stairs room—the same one in which the coroner's investigation was conducted, and where a dramatic scene occurred when the street car driver, Mr. Williams, looked at Cluverius to see if he could identify him as the man who, in company with a lady, got off the street car at Reservoir street and turned down towards the reservoir on the night of the tragedy. Cluverius was dressed in a

HOW HE RECEIVED THE NEWS.

When the action of the court was made known to him he never trembled or moved a muscle, except perhaps a little twitching of the facial muscles, and this soon passed away, giving place to that sternness and self-control which has excited so much wonder, and has been a puzzle.

"If Savannah needs a guard, here it is; if the United States needs troops for war, I don't know where they could get better, braver, or more trustworthy soldiers than right here in Georgia. When he heard the words, "The decision is unfavorable to you," he raised his eyes, which had been gazing at the floor, and, in a to you," he raised his eyes, which had been gazing at the floor, and, in a clear voice, said: "I am surprised."
Here he paused, and the silence seemalways stood preeminently promi-nent for the assertion and mainten-ance of the independence and dignity ed as painful to those who saw the prisoner as it was to the prisoner himself. Presently he qualified his remarks, and in a voice more trembling than at any time heretofore, he remarked, "I had hoped for better

The steel department of the South Tredegar Iron and Nail Works is now under full headway, and the first steel nails ever made of Southern manufactured steel are being turned out. The Bessemer furnace which shut down a week ago to undergo some needed changes, was fired up again wednesday, and a number of splendid costs was made. splendid casts were made. Soon after the fires were rekindled in the furnace, the nail mill resumed, and in a few hours the manufacture of steel nails from Southern steel had begun, and the nails were falling from the machine like hail. The nails are of a fine quality, durable, and stood all the several tests to which they were subjected. Attempt to Wreck a Train. CHICAGO, May 8.—An attempt was made last night to wreck an outgoing night passenger train on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road by opening a switch near Fourteentn street and removing the light therefrom. It. Davis paid a handsome compliment to the Dubuque Drum Corps, recalling his remembrance of Davidue when it was the home of the red man. They had been received here, he said, with a warm and hearty welcome. Alluding to the unwelling of the bronze tablets on the Green monument, he said:
