RURAL ROUTES AND THE SPELL-BINDERS.

The people of the North, having long relied upon newspapers and books for their information, are not affected so much by the spell-binders as are the Southern people. The latter have always been country-dwellers. Their minds have come to them at comparatively long intervals. They have paid more attention to the peaceful tilling of the soil than to newspapers. And so when the campaign year came round, they were in a state of ignorance, they were slow to receive information, they were slow to receive news, they were slow to receive anything that was not a matter of education.

Rierson, at No. 411 North College street, was entered by a burglar and the house ransacked. Mr. and Mrs. Rierson had gone out to visit friends and on returning to the home about half past 10 o'clock saw a light in the kitchen which moved from the kitchen into the dining room and then into a front room. They were uncertain what to do for a moment, but Mrs. Rierson quickly solved the situation by running across the street to the residence of Mrs. M. K. Brown, and telephoning from there to the police station. Sergeant Farrington, Officer Anbury and Patrol Driver Orr responded to the call, and immediately proceeded to the scene of the burglar's operations.
