DAVIS AND VARDAMAN AS SENATORS.

The Nashville American is disgusted in the extreme that Jeff Davis is to be the next Senator from Arkansas.

It is beginning to appear as though Andrew Carnegie were in his dotage. He has interested himself in a reform of method of spelling, and an Atlanta dispatch records his kissing two ladies there last week.

The news from Venezuela grows worse—Sunday night's dispatches telling of the destruction of a town of 10,000 inhabitants. Fortunately all the inhabitants escaped.

It is announced in a dispatch from Savannah that this will likely be the last week of the Greene and Clayton trial, the case going to the jury the latter part of the week.

One hundred printers were discharged from the Government Printing Office last week by Public Printer Stillings, the reason assigned being lack of work.

WOKED UP THE WRONG PASSENGER.

The Georgia gubernatorial fight, which for so many months has apparently been confined to Atlanta, has spread over the State and in The Macon Telegraph of Sunday we find a double-headed editorial under the caption, "A Lie Nailed."

"If any man has a grievance or wants to pick a quarrel with the responsible head of this newspaper—the man who makes its policy and directs its course—can find him fourteen hours a day in or about The Telegraph office, or see his name at the head of this column.

Now that's the way to put it! The Atlanta papers have gone so far in the warfare between themselves that their denunciation of each other attracts little attention.

The Observer has received from the John A. Lowell Bank Note Company, of Boston, its latest publication, an etched portrait of General Robert E. Lee.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATIONS.

Wilmington Chamber of Commerce Charges That Seaboard Air Line Is Partial Virginia Jobbers.

The chamber of commerce is called in special session to-morrow to consider the alleged discrimination of the Seaboard Air Line in favor of Virginia jobbers in the delivery of freight shipped from this point north of Hamlet.

SOUTH CAROLINA NIGHT.

GOVERNOR AND SENATOR HEAR.

Governor D. C. Heyward and Senator B. H. Tillman, guests at Senator's Dinner, were entertained at a banquet given by the Manufacturers' Club of Mr. E. R. Preston, after which he spent some time in The Observer office.

"I have long since learned never to try to keep anything hid from a newspaper man," he laughed. "They like to get in on my side and I do not want to tell them anything. If I show confidence in them, they never abuse it; but when I try to keep secrets they get them anyhow and then do as they please with them."

"Yes," he said, "but of course there's nothing in that but pleasant. What do you think of the Parker proposition?"

"This party meant an end of the topic," he reported and his attention to his personal plans in politics.

"My term expires pretty soon," said the Governor, and then he intended to retire from politics for a while anyway, and turn his attention to private business.

"He wanted to be pleasant—perhaps he cannot help being pleasant—but he did not want to be interviewed, Mr. Osmond Barringer came in, and the Governor and he became interested in his family connections.

"But you don't know who I am," he doctored. "Now, it wouldn't do for me just to say what your name is; I replied, 'since I have been so long. But suppose I guess that it's Smith.'"

"What do you think, then, of my remembering people?" I asked him. "Do think I was just guessing, or that I knew?"

"He laughed," the Governor carries sunshine along with him. It is not hard to account for his popularity, and, being a young man, if something does turn up in the future to draw him again into politics, there is no danger of his being defeated.
