Wages vs "Salaries".

The cry of the industrial world is for man who can actually de some thing. We have applicants every day by young men and old man who want "positions."
"What can you do?" is the first question we ask, because we really need men. We need right now four good machinists and two moulders. These don't come along. If most of those who do come would answe our question in full frankness they would say. "I can't do anything in particular with any degree of efficiency except draw my isslary and quit promptly when the whistle blows."
The good mechanic's wages will usually range from $50 to $100 a month and these stand in the line of increase and promotion. The unstrained man gets $25 to $40 a month and stands in the line of mothing.
It seems a pity we haven't a better system of training the boys and young men in a way to make them capeble of actually doing something. A machinist apprenticeship can't hurt any boy, even though he expects to be a lawyer or a doctor.

to be a lawyer or a doctor. There's plenty of time between school and college terms to give a boy or young man a practical apprenticeship. This time is usually worse than wasted. The boy not only fails to learn to do some useful thing, but does acquire idle habits, sometimes vicious habits.

but does acquire idle habits, sometimes vicious habits. In our manufacture of pulleys, shafting, hangers, engine lathes, looms, spoolers, reels and other cotton and cotton oil machinery, we rejoice in the young fellow who has served his time and can actually take hold of the building of some of our machines. It's depressing to have the other young fellow come along—the one who has wasted the time of his boyhood and youth in idleness and who can do nothing in particular. Our view of the matter is that none of the schooling should be omitted, but that a reasonable portion of the intervening time should be applied to learning some trade. It's as easy to teach a boy to love work with the result of capability as it is to let him drift into habits of idleness with the result of incapability.

foor he has the association in an up-rear of laughter and merriment. The entists of North Carolina are very ethical and they have a committee appointed to see that no one deviates appointed to see that no one deviates from the stringent rules of practice laid down by the society. The as-sociation allows no members to ad-vertise in a braggadocio manner or make wild statements in regard to their practice. For instance, no one is allowed to advertise or promise painiess extraction of teeth. If he es, out of the society he goes. They have a standard price also and the dentist must not go below it. The granting of license is a guarantee of their ability and upon this they stand, the public finding this out without resorting to too much publicity in the newspapers or otherwise and espe-

NO REPLY FROM SOUTHERN.

South Carolina Railroad Commission's Demand for Heavier Ralls and Bet-ter Roadbed Remains Unanswered Rallway Authorities.

Observer Bureau, 1209 Main Street, Columbia, S. C., June 21.

General Manager Spencer, of the Southern Railway, has not so far even acknowledged receipt of the letter of the railroad commission sent May 6th demanding the laying of heavier rails, a better roadbed and additional sidetrack as necessary to relieve the congested condition of traffic in this State and afford passenger trains opportunity to run on time. The com-mission has just addressed a letter to Mr. Spencer asking for a reply.

But the commission is confident. however, that the management will in a short time provide for the necessary things to be done and is hopeful that conditions will be radically changed in a few months. Mr. Spencer made a personal tour of inspection over the lines in this section immediately following the receipt of the letter from the commission and sion indirectly that that trip will result in something being done soon. "I believe the Southern will make the necessary changes to give relief within a reasonable length of time," said Commissioner Caughman to-day, "but the commission has authority to compel this to be done, and it intends to see that it is done. If something substantial does not happen in the
