TOM DIXON WINS SUIT.

North Carolinians who know Mr. Phomas Dixon, Jr., will be interested in the following story from The New York World of yesterday.

"Paul M. Potter, the playwright, owes $500 to Thomas Dixon, Jr., who used to be a clergyman and is a theatrical manager now, so Justice Joseph decided in the First Manicipal Court yesterday. But Mr. Potter's lawyers filed a motion for a new trial and so the revivence author of The

into a contract with Mr. Potter to collaborate with him in dramatizing Mr. Dixon's novel, "The One Woman." Mr. Dixon said he paid $500 down to give his undivided attention to The

One Woman—here the theatrical men laughed loudly—and to deliver the play complete by June 1. "By the contract, Mr. Potter was to receive 2 1-2 per cent. of the first $5,600 of gross weekly receipts as royalty, and 5 per cent. on all amounts taken in by "The One Woman' that should exceed $5,000 weekly.

"Mr. Dixon said that five weeks passed during which Mr. Potter neglected The One Woman' entirely, but found time to dash off other plays. Mr. Dixon was getting very nervous ever been, and he wants to see them about the play, of which the initial climb as rapidly as the proficiency of performance had been arranged, the help will allow. when, one moonless midnight, he received a summons from Mr. Potter who had handed him a scenario which completely changed the plot and contained ideas appropriated from The Ragpicker of Paris' and other

"Mr. Potter told Mr. Dixon as kindly as possible, that 'The One Woman' was difficult of adaptation to the stage and modestly demanded a new contract giving him 5 per cent. royalty on all the gross receipts that might accrue from his plot.

"Mr. Potter testified that he was engaged to do only the work usually ione by a collaborator; simply to arrange the scenario.

"'For the writing of dialogue is mere trivialty,' he said carelessly, "'Mr. Dixon wanted a play that turned on a clergyman who murdered a man for a woman's sake,' said Mr. safter that he'll know more.' 'and nothing that we tried pleased him. I concluded that' the trouble was with the clergyman-the clergyman in the play, of course. Clergymen are ticklish subjects to handle; we playwrights usually leave them alone.

"But Mr. Potter insisted that the cenario he proffered was only a suggestion, and he was always willing to from it. complete his contract; but Mr. Dixon, with another collaborator, had dramatized 'The One Woman.' "

Mr. Lewis W. Parker, who was here o-night, spoke in an enthusiastic way of the advantages likely to accrue to Charleston, the State and this section generally from the proposed establawyers filed a motion for a new trial and so the reverence author of The Clansman' will have to wait awhile for the money, if he gets it at all.

"Mr. Dixon and Mr. Potter were the star witnesses yesterday. In the audience were Charles Frohman and other men of the theatre, who seemed highly amused by the testimony of the postly white-haired maker of plays.

"Mr. Dixon testified that he entered into a contract with Mr. Potter in the first trip a success. The mill products for export are routed by the buyers and nearly all of it goes products for export are routed by the buyers and nearly all of it goes entirely across the continent and to the East across the Facilic, but in the past few years the mills have gotten together and have been shipping through Charleston for New York and other points in the United States and in three years the ship-ments this way have increased a thou-sand per cent. from 30,000 bales to 300,000 bales.

Mr. Parker predicts a brilliant advancement for this section in the next ten years, through power derelopments which will cheapen power and induce the establishment of small manufacturing enterprises, which will employ high-priced help. He said mill wages were higher to day in this section than they had
