THREE-CORNERED CONTEST MAN'S SIN AND GOD'S PROMISE

First Quarter. Lesson III. Genesis 1-6; 13-15.

(Copyright, Davis W. Clark) Genesis "Third" is a target fairly hot through, not only with the darts of a vulgar infidelity, but the wellaimed arrows of a scholarly criticism. But, after all, the chapter is unharmed. It stands alone in literature. It is helpful toward the selution of an occult problem—the origin of evil. By some it is accepted as literal history; by others as a vivid pictoriol and poetical description of man's early struggle with evil. Under either interpretation, Adam and Eve are represented as nobly endowed. They had a happy environment, and were under the direct and daily tutelage of their Master. But they were on probation. In Eden the problem was solving whether they would persist in cheering to obey God or not sist in choosing to obey God or not. A test was given. It was simple, but adequate, and exactly suited to their estate. Of the fruit of one attractive and conspicuously-located tree they were forbidden. The prohibition was so explicit, permptory, and oft-repeated, that inadventence was out of the "Thou shalt not!" fairly written upon the leaves of the tree. Persistent abstinence was visible and potent sign to God and angels, good and evil, of their conscious and voluntary loyalty to God. Under this Adamic covenant God stood ready for His part to supply grace sufficient; but Adam, on his side, must choose to keep obeying

God. We have no means of knowing how long the happy Eden life continued. The true idea of Adam's state is probably that which places him midway between the savage and the sage. He was a laborer, but suffered not the excessive weariness and vexation incident to labor now. He was busy getting "dominion," subduing the triple kingdoms—earth, air, water; vegetable, animal, mineral. In the evening hour, when activities cease and the human heart is ever most im-pressible, he exjoyed immediate communion with his Creator, who corrected his mistakes and inspired him with new courage and love.

At length, at some period when man's tutelage was far enough advanced to make his chances for enward, New York, and the Edgemere There is no part of the establishment to make the race Monday and will be during the ordeal most favorable, a cruel test was permitted. the shadows of Eden, in which, with a silly, ostrich-like in-stinct, they sought to hide themselves from the omniscience of their Maker, God called them. It was a fearful meeting. The reality of man's fall is evidenced by his changed bearing. The frankness of innocence is gone. When fairly cornered by his omniscient Prosecutor, with the historic cowardice of sin, he seeks to cast the blame directly upon the companion whom, up ti that moment, he had loved devotedly and sheltered courageously, and indirectly upon the beneficent Being who had given her to him. Across the densest gloom of this shattered paradise God let one ray of heavenly hope fall aslant: "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." The age-long strife just then beginning, with its vary-ing fortunes, between the good and the evil seed, shall finally cease when the Man of Calvary puts His bitten heel upon the serpent's head.
