DAVIS ONCE AIDED ENGLAND.

Deepest Gratitude Was Felt for Him Because of Action in International Arbitration Court at Paris on Sinking of British Fishing Vessels in North Sea by Russian Fleet.

London, Jan. 21.—By a singular coincidence Admiral Davis happens to be an officer to whom England heretofore has felt the deepest gratitude, as his course while the American member of the international arbitration court at Paris upon the sinking of the British fishing vessels in the North Sea by the Russian fleet practically was decisive in shaping a decision favorable to Great Britain.

Some phases of the arbitration were not sealed at the time as they might have proven irritating to Russia. It is known that Admiral Davis' staunch support of the British contention turned the scales at the decisive moment.

His views were accepted by the Austrian admiral and this, with the vote of the British member, Admiral Baumont, made a majority which determined the character of the final decision.

King Edward, on the conclusion of the court, communicated an invitation through the British ambassador.
