gulls in Philadelphia and the New England States, and who testified to seeing with their own eyes hundreds of looms and thousands of spindles idle solely because labor could not be found to operate them...

"As a last stand in the case, the government undertook, by a cross-examination of our witnesses, to show that the labor conditions in the South were preventing us from getting the needed help...

"The next point of investigation was as to whether the failure to get operatives was due to the condition of the mill houses and the conveniences and comforts furnished the operatives. From this point the Messrs. Parker and South Carolina, testified that at the Monaghan Mills, at Greenville, his company had every attraction that could be thought of within the bounds of reason...

MR. COOLEY'S ADMIRABLE CONDUCT

"Well, Mr. Parker, how was your supply of operatives at the Monaghan?"

"To this Mr. Parker replied: 'I can not explain why it is, but as a matter of fact our deficiency in help at that mill was as great, if not greater, than any other.' That was a blow which demolished the government's other position..."

MR. COOLEY'S ADMIRABLE CONDUCT

"In addition to this, it was shown that the Northern mill operatives could not find such attractions as existed at the North. Mr. J. A. Smith testified that he went into a New England mill village and tried to hire some weavers...
