A house of worship known as the Workers' Mission has just been completed in the furniture factory of this city, and last evening the Junior Order laid the corner-stone and presented a Bible to the new mission. The building is a wooden one and contains a free library, reading room, Sunday school room and a school room, where the children who work in the mills can attend free of charge at night. Several local speakers of prominence made short addresses at the ceremonies last night and a collection for the maintenance of the work was taken. This is a splendid work and filled a long-felt want in that part of the city. While all denominations have contributed liberally to the erection of the building, Rev. J. E. Smith, pastor of the Baptist church, has been the most active in the establishment of this worthy enterprise.
