LEAGUE GIVES SMOKER.

Large Crowds Attend Enjoyable Event at League Headquarters—Speeches by Prominent Citizens and Music by the Woodman Band—Probably 1,200 People Present.

One of the most enjoyable events of its kind in many years was the informal smoker tendered the oltizens of Charlotte by the Business Men's Municipal League in its headquarteres at No. 217 South Tryon street last night. Probably 1,200 people came and went throughout the hours the'entertainment was in progress. Smoke-ables were dispensed freely and while good music was furnished by the Woodman band, the guests moved here and there and held merry converse one with another.

Entausiastic speeches were made, among others, by Messrs. T. L. Kirkpatrick, W. R. Robertson, Allison Hunn, Joe Klouse, Chas. C. Williams, Will T. Hart, T. J. Davis and Jas W. Wadenarth. A PRETTY JUNE WEDDING wedding in June, we offer the following suggestions:

In answer to your letter regarding decorations for a home

We would say that a crepe paper can be used instead of a ribbon and with very good results. In treating the three rooms, one to be red, we would suggest the following arrangement: Dining room red and green, parlor white and green and the hall green.

When the guests enter they will first be in a bower of green; the step to green and white is natural, and the deeper colors beyond,

We take it that the parlor will be the room where the cere-mony will be performed. White should be the wedding color. If you have fireplaces, they should be filled with green and the space above the mantels made a special feature of the decoration. The scheme should culminate where the wedding party stands. We do not know the arrangement of the rooms, but possibly you have planned to have the fireplace as a background. The entire space above the mantel could be covered with white crepe paper and used as a background for smills and ferns, the white being covered with the cover with green. Very tall glass vases, one on each side of the mantel, should hold white roses or other white flowers, the glass being partially covered with smilax. The mantel shelf should be covered with green, vines hiding the edge of the shelf. A solid band of white flowers outlined at the top with ferns or smilax could be used at the back of the shelf against the paper. This should be Daisies make a lovely decoration and are so plentiful that they can be used in quantities. Balls of daisies suspended at the four corners of the room are charming.

Chandeliers should be hidden in green. If an elaborate decora-tion is desired, ropes of laurel or similar green could extend from the chandeliers to the corners of the room. It is well to avoid a spotty effect. Have one special place of interest and have most of the time be spent there.

chicken wire makes an excellent foundation for screens. A pretty effect can be obtained should the room be very large and you should desire to "fence off" a portion of same by covering the wire with vines. A wedding bell in white is appropriate. A room decorated in this manner is more effective where the floor is covered with green, as well as the walls. The room would be very easy to make a great success. By holding to white and green any room ought to be very attractive, no matter what the foundation. In the dining room the scheme could be much gayer. Red paper could be used to fill in the space above the mantel (extending to the ceiling in both instances). It should be covered in green and the mantel covered like the other. Only more flowers could be used. Red carnations are made in paper, but we would advise the real flower. If daisies are used, they could be used here also. It might be difficult to get all red flowers. Red, green and white are always harmonious. We would not advise festoons of crepe paper, but festoons of green, bound and tied with red paper would be in good taste. Great bows of red paper could be used in the same way in the parlor. For decorating the table two schemes present themselves, either a low figal effect, or else a very high, one. Where the latter is desired, tall glass vases three or four feet high are used at the corners of the table, with ribbon or paper streamers extending to the cantre, held in place by a low centrepiece of ferns or flowers. Or, sometimes one high vase is used in the centre and four streamers extend to the corners, where they are held in place by sprays of flowers.

Where a low effect is desired, nothing is prettier than a centre-

We have not said much about the hall. The staircase could be twined with green, and ferns and palms used profusely. It is a good plan on such occasions to take down most of the pictures and bric-a-brac and to hide all unnecessary furniture. This statement refers to the principal rooms. Flowers in profusion need plenty of space.

With best wishes for the decorations, and also for the wedding party, we are.
