He then referred to the helpful services conducted by Mr. Neighbour at the Ninth Avenue Babtist church in the morning and at the First Babtist church at night. Then he spoke of the great meeting for men that was held in the tent in the afternoon; of he service he said that he believed it to be the best service ever conducted for men in Charlotte during his residence in this city. He said further that he had heard the sermons of all of the cause of Christianity in Charlotte. He law, and this case then referred to the helpful services had heard the sermons of all of the evangelists who have preached to men here during the time that he has been there, but that he had neveh seen so many men so moved at any of those services as at that of Sunday afternoon. He then made the announcements for the week, stating that services would be held every night thus in the tent, with singing by Mr. Bell and preaching by Mr. Neighbour.

Before announcing his text, Mr. Neighbour announsed that he wished it thoroughly understood that during this meeting so far no collection has been taken up and that none will be taken while it shall continue. He said there were of course expenses connected with the meting and that if there were those attending the service who desired to make an offering to assist in meeting these expenses it would be gladly received, but that none would be asked.

The subject of Mr. Neighbour's sermon was Belshazzar's life. He spoke earnestly of the things in his life that kept him away from God. These things were that Belshazzar was (1) a pleasure seeker, (2), was thoughtless of God, (3) was leading a life of debauchery, (4) was a mocker of God, (5) he had a sense of false security.

Mr. Neighbour spoke impressively of all of these things and made the application to men and women of the present day who are kept away from God by the same causes as those that kept Belshazzar away. He said that he brought this solemn message in order to warn and not to scare those in the congregation, but said that it is better for men and wo-men to come to God through fear than not to come to Him at all, although fear is not the highest motive from which to come.

At the conclusion of the sermon several penitents came forward for prayer and remained for the after

Before dismissing the congregation Mr. Neighbour stated that this meeting is being held under the auspices the several Baptist churches the city, and said that he wanted to urge to Baptist converts to connect themselves with one of these churches. He said further that if control of such commerce by interferes with comout of and back into the churches of other denominations their names would be given to the pastors of the churches of their preference.

To-night Mr. Neighbour will preach on Belshazzar's death, and his pres-ence before the bar of God.
