Cojored Woman on Trial. Sonnie Mayfield, colored, was arraigned before the recorder yesterday morning on the charge of disorderly conduct, but after a spicy trial she was dismissed for lack of evidence. The State was unable to fix the guilt for the disorder upon any person. The most notable witness was old Lou Featherston who, when asked by an attorney if she drank liquor, became so incensed at this reflection upon her purity of heart that a personal encounter was almost looked for by the more timorous of the spectators. Fortunately, however, no blows were passed.

Dr. J. E. Eubanks, of Monroe, spent yesterday in the city with friends.

Dr. E. G. Henderson, of Davidson, spent last night in the city, stopping at the Buford.

MR. ERWIN ON THE PANIC

Influential West Durham Manufacturer Expresses the Belief That Benefits Will Accrue From the Period of Depression Which is Now Upon Us...

Mr. W. A. Erwin, of West Durham, president of the Erwin Cotton Mills and one of the most successful and influential manufacturers in the State, spent yesterday in the city on business, stopping at the Selwyn. In conversation with an Observer man last night Mr. Erwin expressed the opinion that the present depressed condition of affairs would obtain until after the presidential election. He deprecated any idea on the part of the mills to shut down for an indefinite period, declaring that in view of the obligations to the operatives, curtailment should be the method resorted to in order to meet the exigencies of the situation. Mr. Erwin also gave expression to his firm conviction that this period of depression would result in good to the industry by reason of the fact that it would make the mill owners more careful and economical in the future. He added that the present trouble had already had the effect of bringing the employers and employees closer together in a more sympathetic bond of union. In a word, while fully cognizant and realizing in its entirety the gravity of the situation, Mr. Erwin does not hold to the belief that all is lost. He appreciates as few others in the State perhaps do, that the industry is in a deplorable condition but he sees no reason on that account to lose faith in the ultimate return of prosperous times.

"Periods of depression, such as we are now having, are not always without benefit," remarked Mr. Erwin. "I am convinced that the present trouble will result in good to the industry. Of course a few will succumb as the test is applied but the final outcome will prove its worth. We have just passed through a season of marked prosperity in the cotton mill business in the South. Many of the mills have been operating in a lax and loose manner, in which waste has been accumulating and cob webs have been creeping in. The seasons have all been profitable and the mills have made money even with injudicious and haphazard methods of operation. The testing time has come and the supreme need of economical management has been demonstrated. The result is that the mills are husbanding their resources and are seeking to operate just as cheap and careful as possible. No longer can the mill owners take things easy but on the contrary they have to count every cent and figure out every detail in order to be able to give even a small margin of profit. What is said of the mill owners, can be also said, though of course in a different degree, of the mill operatives. The operatives, like everybody else, have been living luxuriously. The decrease of their income by reason of the curtailment of their time and therefore their production and therefore their income has made manifest the fact that they must practice the economies of life. The benefit has been a double one.

"There is no one who will doubt but that the recent depressed condition of affairs and the consequent troubles through which all of the mills have passed, has brought the operatives closer together. The mill hands have recognized the straits of the mill owners and the mill owners in return have recognized the obligations resting upon them to give work to their operatives. Both have come to realize the existence of a mutual obligation which neither can violate without consequent injury. Unquestionably both are doing all in their power to adjust themselves to the conditions. "The fact is of interest," continued Mr. Erwin, "that the percentage of production by the operatives has improved in a noticeable degree within the past few months. Appreciating the situation and seeing that what they can, the operatives are going about their work in a more zealous manner. The readjustment of prices has resulted in the garnering of a little trade."

Mr. Erwin will leave this morning for Moolesville.

BRIEFS

A Few Minor Happenings in and About the City.

To-day's game will count towards the pennant. Take heed to it.
