

FINALS AT PRESBYTERIAN

ADDRESS BY DR. J. A. B. SCHERER

Interesting Exercises Last Night at Presbyterian College Brought to a Successful Conclusion the Hope Rivalry of Over a Dozen Pretty Girl Graduates—President Makes Announcement of Honors—Board of Trustees Endorses Administration of the President—An Address by Dr. Scherer on "Browning's Women."

The most brilliant scene of a notable year was enacted at the Presbyterian College for Women last night when the thirteen young ladies who had, after faithful labor, completed the various college courses received the official attestations of merit from the faculty and trustees of the institution. The exercise of the evening brought to a climatic close its fiftieth commencement. The spacious and handsome auditorium was filled with a cultured, well-dressed audience which proved thoroughly appreciative of the exercises.

Nothing else in the world is like commencement at a college for girls. No other occasion can be so rival in picturesqueness. The busy marshals, representative of the best looks of the lower classes, hurrying hither and thither, arrayed in white, now arranging the luxuriant masses of flowers and which await a claimant from the throng shortly to occupy the rostrum, now seating a rapidly arriving and expectant audience, lend life and vigor to the whole. The march in and occupy reserved seats in front of the stage. Then file the seniors slowly in cap and gown, each looking her prettiest, for this is the proudest moment in the life of each. There may be prouder moments in store for the future, but up to this time, the present holds undisputed sway.

Upon the rostrum last night sat those who took part directly in the evening's exercises, the trustees of the college, the seniors and their mascot, little Miss Elizabeth Fore, the beautiful and attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Fore. When, at the close of the awarding of diplomas, the marshals hurried forward with huge clusters of flowers, for a while the distinctive lady was the only one on the stage who was not so honored. When on the next round a smiling marshal laid in her lap a bunch of beautiful roses, the audience applauded loudly.

The evening's exercises were opened by an organ selection by Mr. Henry F. Anderson, "Grand Chorus," by DuBois. Rev. R. A. Miller then led in prayer, after which Dr. Bridges read the report of the college, announced the following honors:

"Hope" and Watt's "Sir Galahad" brought a response from the president, Dr. J. H. Bridges, that showed they greatly appreciated the work of the class of 1938 throughout the year and also this gift to their alma mater. Miss Susie McMurray gave in fitting tones the "Last Will and Testament" of the senior class, and Miss Marjorie prophesied all kinds of fortunate future for the follow-graduates. Both of these seniors got effective hits at the faculty and different students; and the affair was further enlivened by an exceedingly brief and mournful valedictory from Miss Mary Owen. Two music seniors helped to brighten this last class exercise with piano and vocal music; Miss Lucy Harris giving "Howdy," Valse, "A-la-Bien-Aimes," and Miss Lily Rozelle two charming songs, "June," by Beach, and "Whiggenled," by Brahms.

The auditorium exercises closed with the class song, when all the seniors filed to the front of the rostrum, and each provided herself with a hoop and stick, and in old rose and gray, the class colors. Out they all marched in solemn order, the tiny mascot, Miss Elizabeth Fore, holding her hoop as bravely as the biggest senior. He was a college president and hence used to being abused. A cynical friend of Miss Perry was recorded by him as having said that he knew of only two college presidents who had been able to remain Christians. "Now, I know you'll all jump to the conclusion that those two are Dr. Bridges and myself," said Dr. Scherer, "but, unfortunately for your clarity of comprehension, the man added that both are now dead."

Coming then direct to his subject, Dr. Scherer said that he should consider in his speech three types of "Browning's Women." The first he characterized as the "puella rumina," a Rumanian in English, has reference to chewing, as will be recognized by any one who possesses sufficient imagination to conjure up before his mind's eye the rural scene of a cow reclining at her ease in a peaceful pasture, chewing her cud. This class of girl he considered an indication of the sociological devolution of the present day; the girl who chews gum. He supposed, of course, this type had no representation in so cultured an institution as the Presbyterian College, but the students have wide influence and he begged them to use it in the way of missionary work. He was addicted to the habit. He knew there were some in South Carolina who did it. He told how shocked he was on returning from a five-year's sojourn abroad on landing in Tacoma to be plunged into a city of jaw-wabbling women. The habit had sprung into vogue during his absence.
