RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.

Labor Unions Make It Hard to Discipline Men.

New York Evening Post. Two articles in the July magazines emphasize the responsibility of the public for railroad 'accidents. Mr. Julius Kruttschnitt, director of maintenance and operation of the Union Pacific system and the Southern Paoffic Company, offers in Appleton's a somewhat feeble apology for the railroads. He makes the surprising assertion that conditions are really improving. Unfortunately, the evidence brought forward is very slight. In 1906, he says, there were 114 persons killed and 1.983 injured in accidents on the Union Pacific; but in 1907 there were only 105 killed and 1.104 injured, though a in the same time there was an increase of 12.87 per cent. in the passenger traffic. The difference is not very reassuring; with such limited data, one suspects that the decrease itself was a railroad accident. Another cheerful aspect of the situation, according to Mr. Kruttschnitt, is that a very great number of all those killed and injured are foolhardy persons who take unnecessary risks, and trespassers who take hazards open-eyed. Mr. Krifttschnitt agrees, on the whole, with Mr. Fagan (writing in The Atlantic) that lack of discipline among employes is the cause of most preventable accidents But Mr. Fagan comes out roundly with the charge that this lack of discipline is largely owing to the "harmony" that exists between managers and employes. The "Brown system" of secretly recording demerits against a man who has broken a rule saves much "irritation" and is very agreeable to all parties conserned, except -the public. Mr. Fagan asserts, furthermore, that the investigation of a railroad accident by the management of an American railroad is neither more nor less than a hushingup process, and that all those who are in a position to speak with authority are "tongue-tied and pen-parslyzed." On the altar of "harmony" the interests of the public are continually being sucrificed. The labor unions, moreover, make it, practically frapossible for the management properix to discipline men, even when it

The number of pianos, good and bad, now made in this country is legion.

Consequently, never before was such discrimination required in the selection of a piano for your home.

What you desire is the best piano at the right price.

In this legion of pianos of ever varying quality but constantly increasing price, the one instrument ideally suited by highest musical art-quality and most favorable home price-advantage is the celebrated Chickering Piano.

Just as, eighty-five years ago, Jonas Chickering made the best piano for music-loving people of that time, so his successors have steadfastly maintained his high principles in the face of unscrupulous competition and the lowering of piano-making ideals, and,-at a price possible for every musical family to pay, are continuing to make the best piano for the American music-loving home of our own time.

We frankly urge you to refrain from buying any piano before you have given us the opportunity to place fully before you the superior merits of the Chickering Piano.
