WOMEN OF PARAGUAY.

Patient and Good Natured-Dress in White and Go Barefooted.

Boston Transcript. Paraguay is rich in local color. The picturesque characters of the native

tures and habits of everyay life are interesting to anybody fond of observing strange phases of human life. By and laughing from sunrise to sunset and taking small thought of what the morrow may have in store for them. It is hard to imagine how Lepez could soldier, a good man and a good bave drilled into tighting material of combined forces of Argentina, Brazil and Uraguay for five long weary years and it speaks volumes for the indomitable energy of the man that he was able to sustain his position for so protracted a time.

Clothing is very much of a superfluity in Paraguay. The attire of the women is a cotton chemise with a long sheetlike shawl, or manta, passed over the head and around the body in is equally simple, consisting only of cotton shirt and trousers. Both sexes are guiltless of foot covering. At times an almost uncanny feeling rises when a group of these white robed, dark haired maidens pass suddenly with the silent tread of unshod feet. Of a morning in the market places the women folk flock to sell wares, carrying on their heads, the basket containing the few cents' worth of native produce they have been able to gather together for disposal in the towns. The soft Guarani language, the common tongue of the Paraguayans, adds further charm to the scene.

Eating to Liva.

Boston Globe. The amiable philosopher, Wu Tingfang, Chinese minister to this country, has given eight rules of the system of living by which he believes a man might attain to 200 years. These rules nearly all relate to diet, and they provide for a smaller quantity of food daily, abstinence from all flesh food, and the thorough mastication of every mouthful before it is swallowed. Luigi Carnaro, the Italian gentleman who found himself abandoned by the doctors at 40, lived as long as he liked, or until he was approaching his one hundredth year, on a diet the most meager, subsisting comfortably in his latter years on one egg a day. , In Cornaro's time, which extended from about the middle of the fifteenth to the same period of the sixteenth century, distarians of his kind were
