BRYAN'S CHANCES.

They Are Bettered by His Well Know Radicalism.

We hope the managers of Mr. Taft's campaign will not be so light-headed and incompetent as to make their campaign on the history of General Keifer that it would take a miracle to land William J. Bryan in the White House, for his views are what the astute Matthew Stanley Quay used to call rainbow chasing. Confidence is a good thing for any man who goes into a fight with the determination to win Over-confidence puts a premium the carelessness and stupidity that throw away victories which might be won with zeal and courage.

The truth about Bryan's chances is that the most " trustworthy political opinion confesses they are far better than they were in 1896 and 1900. There are a few close observers of actual conditions who do not place the entire South, with the new State of Oklahoma, in the Bryan column. They concede that until the Republican party can prove to the contrary at the polls Bryan ought to be credited with West Virginia, Maryland and Dela-ware, as well as the habitually Democratic States of the solid South. This would mean 176 votes in the electoral college, with 242 necessary to choice
