PLEASE SOMEBODY TELL

WHERE THEY GOT THAT LICKER

Alderman G. G. Scott, Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Board of Aldermen, has been charged with the licker. The Board of Aldermen, on December 21, 1938, at the solicitation of Solicitor Clark, about some suspicious-looking beverages used as Municipal and Convention. Question Which the Solicitor Considered Pertinent—Extracts of a Conversation Between Him and Mr. Scott.

"Where did you get your liquor?" This question, somewhat synonymously with the name of Mr. M. Shannonhouse with whom it originated, during his administration as city recorder and which on sundry occasions and in divers places has been asked, took on added interest last week when the foreman of the grand jury of the county, Mr. D. W. Mayes, asked it of Alderman G. G. Scott. The occasion of the question being asked this gentleman and under these circumstances was the outgrowth of whisperings on the part of the Foreman as to whom came the liquor for the banquet at the Selwyn to the delegates to the municipal convention. And Mr. Scott answered that he didn't know.

MYSTERY TO GRAND JURY. While going about his business duties one day toward the latter portion of the week, Mr. Scott was accosted by the sheriff with a subpoena signed by Judge M. E. Justice. It evidenced nothing as to the purpose of his appearing before the court and he thought it was some trivial affair about which he might have some information. He stepped into the little room where the grand jurors were at their work and stated that he had been summoned to present himself to them for reasons which he knew not.

"What have I been doing?" he said, naively to the jury, whereupon the blank stare went from face to face, while Mr. Scott's wonderment grew. "Why, I know nothing about this, Mr. Scott," replied the foreman of the grand jury.

"Well, perhaps you had better go out and ask the solicitor what he wants with me," calmly suggested the foreman.

The foreman took this suggestion and went out for a short conference with Solicitor Clark. Coming back, his face wreathed in smiles, he said:

"Mr. Scott, the solicitor would like to know where that wine came from that was used at the municipal banquet some nights ago."

"I am sure I cannot tell you. I don't buy it and know nothing about its origin," declared Mr. Scott. He was immediately dismissed.

CHAPTER TWO. "Heriot, what did you want to have me appear before the grand jury about that matter for?" inquired Mr. Scott, a few days later, as he met the collector and his fellow-vestryman in the Episcopal church.

"That was a slap flat in the face of the prohibition people of this city," remarked Mr. Clark, with some degree of emphasis.

"It was a prohibition banquet, man," interposed Mr. Scott.

"Well, I am not the man you wanted to see," Mr. Scott answered.

"I don't know about that. I acted in accordance with what I believed was my duty when it appeared so strongly that the law regarding the sale of whiskey had been violated. I can't neglect to call the rich and the prominent into account for their trifling with whiskey. The law falls equally on all and for that reason I saw no way to escape some investigation of this alleged violation."

"There is a law on the State statute books forbidding the operation of freight trains on Sunday. Heriot, why is it that you are not so cautious about this? There are other laws being violated around us every day of which we hear nothing more. Why is it that you don't have investigations into them?" Mr. Scott was getting in an argumentative mood.

"These are different propositions," answered the solicitor.

QUESTION STILL UNSOLVED. But the question, "Where did you get your liquor?" is still unsolved. Yet, it is a familiar question of explanation have been heard, or slightly rumble as if to answer this extremely important interrogation, but before these reached the ears of the court, they faded into a more indistinct. Prohibitionists and anti-prohibitionists sat down together that night around the festive board and partook together of the delicious fare as abundantly provided. A addition to water and coffee, thimble-fuls of other beverages were placed around the individual plates. Some of the elite of the State were being banquet-
