BOARD RATIFIES CHARTER

prise. The speaker continued. "If we read the handwriting on the wall, there is going to be a bitter fight on that provision at Raleigh. I see in the afternoon papers that a mass meeting of citizens will be held Tuesday night to protest against it. We have been presented with petitions against it signed by more than 2,000 voters. I make this motion not for the purpose of opposing any of my colleagues on this question, but I believe the majority of the voters in the city are against the election of the mayor by the board of aldermen and I am standing for what I believe to be right. As I have stated before I hold that the three departments of government should be separate and independent of each other. You may call the opposition to this plan sentiment, you may call it what you will, it is written irrevocably in the foundation principles of the American government."

Alderman Dunn seconded this motion. Alderman Bland was the first man on the floor in opposition. "If we were going to meet here one night and do a thing and then meet the next night and undo that, we will be in the position of certain King of France who marched up hill and marched down again," he objected obstinately. "This is a most extraordinary proceeding. I thought we came here simply to ratify the charter already agreed on in its fundamental principles. If we change it, we'll have no charter. That's all."

"I don't think it would be right to send it to Raleigh changed without first giving notice to the committee of ten and calling them together so that they could be heard," said the mayor. SHOULD RUN THE THING. "Mr. Chairman," said Colonel Kirkpatrick, up again in defense of his motion and in reply to the chair. "I hold that this body is the accredited representative of the people of Charlotte. The committee of ten is a body of men called in to advise us. This board, elected by the voters of the 40,000 Charlotteans, derives its sovereign power from the sovereign people, and is amenable only to them. I am opposed to our being directed any further by the committee of ten. I admit that the final court of appeal is the General Assembly, but next to it in authority ranks the board of aldermen."

Mr. Sheeler said: "I am not in favor of voting to make any important change in this charter or amending any part of it. It has been understood all the time that whatever the committee of ten and the board agreed on together should recommend to the Legislature."

Alderman Bunn was under the impression that if the aldermen couldn't change the document there was no use in calling the meeting. "I am not in favor of voting to make any important change in this charter or amending any part of it. It has been understood all the time that whatever the committee of ten and the board agreed on together should recommend to the Legislature."

A lively discussion followed in more or less haphazard fashion for several minutes. Mr. Garibaldi said that he didn't care how hard they fought it at Raleigh. All the board had to do was to frame the document according to the judgment and the responsibility rested on them. "What do we care if the other side goes to Raleigh in 60 car loads?" he wanted to know. "Let's get through with this thing. It looks like child's play to agree on a thing one time and then run around and change it."

Alderman Chambers offered an amendment to the motion so as to recommend to the Legislature just what the board and the committee of ten had agreed on. Alderman Murphy seconded this. "I hope this body will not make this decision," said the orator from Dilworth. "I hope that this board out of self-respect will not put itself on record as doing nothing but a surrender. If it does it deserves to become the laughing stock of the community. (The colonel was warming up by this time). The members who were elected two years ago by the Business Men's Municipal League were placed in office by the votes of the people and they owe to these people to see that the power to elect the mayor should remain vested in them. If we vote for this charter as it stands"

we will repudiate the power that put us here. There is a fight on in Charlotte against that first provision. The principle for which the fight is made is firmly embedded in the foundation of our government and in the hearts of our people. That principle is knocking at the door of this aldermanic chamber to-night and it deserves to be heard."

The colonel referred to the fact that some of the present board of aldermen did not have to go out and scarp for what they got in the last campaign and intimated that those who did not represent the people directly. Mayor Franklin here took occasion to explain a suggestion which he had previously made and which had been embodied in the general amendment to decide whether or not the charter as a whole should receive re-consideration. He thought the disaffected ones might as well see if they had created enough to do anything and if not, to not waste time.

THE FUN CONTINUES. Said Alderman Williams: "Mr. Chambers says we ought to adopt the recommendation of the committee of ten."

Said Mr. Chambers: "I do not say that I beg your pardon. I said the agreement between the board of aldermen and the committee of ten. Colonel Kirkpatrick said that some of us on this board do not represent the people. I came on this board at the solicitation of a number of prominent citizens and not of my own desire. I didn't want to be here. I wish I was not now. (A voice—'We're glad to have you, Jesse!') He emphasized the fact that the conflict between the aldermen and the committee of ten and that it was in pursuance of that agreement that the board had met merely to ratify the phraseology of the lawyers. He didn't want to be put in the attitude of opposing what the people wanted. He showed that he was merely standing for what had been already decided on."

Another speech from the alderman from the ninth ward was then in order. He disclaimed intention of reflecting on Mr. Chambers. "There are a number of others here who were not in that fight and who are of the rest of you you won't get in it again," said Mr. Jos. Garibaldi. "That's all right," shouted his fellow-ward-man, waving his arms in emphasis. "I love a scrap. I hope I'll be scrapping when the Angel Gabriel sounds his trumpet. I'm going to fight for what I believe to be right. I'll fight this provision here and I'm going to fight and fight it, if the whole charter falls through."

"Question" came the call. On the roll call the vote stood thus: ayes 10, nays 10. The amendment, which meant that the matter in general should not be re-opened, Alderman Lee, Murphy, Chambers, Sheier, Smith, Cave, Scott, Bland, Garibaldi—9 in all, nays: Henderson, Williams, Bunn, Severs and Kirkpatrick—5. "Mr. Chairman," said the colonel (there is only one on the board), "I move that this meeting do now adjourn." The question was put and a deep-voiced chorus of "no's" drowned out the going to adjourn. "There are only three things in the charter I object to and since there is no possibility of my being heard, I ask to be excused," said Alderman Williams. Mr. Bunn wanted to attend to business and the mayor had excused him. Colonel Kirkpatrick had put on his overcoat and the trio was moving toward the door. "Squire Severs, too, was preparing to make a break for liberty, remarking that it was 1 o'clock when he got away the last time."

"Hold on there," said the mayor to the crowd. "You haven't been excused yet. I'll withdraw my excuse of Mr. Bunn for the present. Let's see if we've got a quorum. I'll have the clerk lock the door if necessary." "I'll look it all right, if you want me too," said Mr. Wearn, coming forward with a smile. "This was found not to be necessary, as a quorum was still present and the departing members were allowed to go in peace. It was decided by the board, on suggestion of the majority of the discussion, to ratify the document as it stood, provisionally. A committee of Aldermen Chambers, Garibaldi, Scott and Lee (though the latter protested that his wife was waiting for him) to hear the charter read in detail. If they found anything wrong with it or anything which they thought needed the attention of the board, a meeting would be called. Then the reading before the committee proceeded."
