A VARIETY OF THINGS

When Mr. Keats exclaimed, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever; its loveliness increases; it will never pass into nothingness; I am going to say that he never owned, in fee simple, a pair of glistening, patent leather shoes."

Sparking of patent leather shoes and the ecstasy their ownership brings to the possessor, if he happens to be a colored man, I will not talk.

I was reading the other day a local story in an eastern paper which excited my curiosity. The item went on to say that one Edward Church, of South Orange, New Jersey, was sued by his wife for divorce, and among other things she alleged that he had been drinking.

When Colonel Clero jumped on Cattline in the Senate and thundered "O tempora, O mores," I don't know exactly what he had in mind.

Originally it was my intention to say but little, in any of the letters I sent back to Charlotte, concerning the "Blind Man" who had been blind since birth.

It is refreshing to know that the mania for the antique and old stuff is subsiding. I see that recently four letters written by George Washington sold at auction for $100—not half as much I dare say as William Randolph Hearst paid for more recent letters written by Mr. Archibald of Standard Oil connection.

The North has criticised the South, and sometimes justly so, because courts have taken time to consider cases where but a few cents were involved, and especially if an African was the light-fingered one who pilfered some article of little value.

"Nelle Hannah, a young domestic of Ridgefield Park, was locked up in the county jail this morning for the alleged theft of two soiled handkerchiefs worth possibly 10 cents. The complaint was made by Thomas D. Smith, her employer, who said that the handkerchiefs were found in her room. The girl told Judge Demarest she did not know how they got there. The judge promptly ordered her release from custody."
