We were talking about Mr. Rogers and his work while travas he was when I saw him last, on his raiser for coming things. private yacht, with his much beloved "Mark Twain," threading his way through the great fleet of battleships lying in Hampton Roads during the Jamestown Exposition. It is hard to say who was happier, he or Mark, though the latter was like a duck in a gale of wind. He and Rogers were slapping each other on the back and laughing, while many hundreds of us on a big excursion steamer were cheering them and exchanging all sorts of pleasantries with whitehaired and white-attired Uncle Mark. so much beloved by all the world which knows and loves good things.

Some lady asked a day or so ago what was the oddest thing we saw up in the mountains on our last tour dren. As we rode up to a little hamlet a girl of perhaps 12 years told some of her people that "foreigners" were coming; by this meaning us, course. That same child would talk from the start, only in a whisper, the very ghost of language, so to speak. and when I asked her before we said July, under the act of the Legislature farewell to each other whether I was are to take up this loan and make a "foreigner" then, I had to bend another quarter of a million available down to get from those pink lips the for the great work of preparing for tiny whisper of the words "no, sir." and the reader who best names the lot. She was as artless as a fawn and really the grace of many of these mountain children is quite beyond the > clasping each other, and with that set look which seems to be very dear to the rural photographer, under this picture the artist having placed the word "dead" in very large letters, adorned with flourishes, flowers, etc. Another picture, also a crayon, and very large, showed the present head of the family in his shirt-sleeves. without a collar; a strapping big mountaineer, evidently a good-hearted fellow, too, for we had the pleasure of meeting him; the presentment of him being with a shotgun held in one hand, looking very much as if it was loaded, too, it being a big double-barrel, while the other hand held a tremendous revolver, firmly elutched, cocked and evidently ready for action. We could not recall ever having seen he was not. Evidently it was the fancy of the artist or of himself to be pletured in this way. Yet one only had to look at him in the fiesh to see that he was grit all the way through and and was, yet when aroused the shotgun and the big revolver would come into play in a jiffy. That's the way of the mountain man; he can be velvet or iron as the necessity may demand, but one may be very sure that he is all there. That's the reason why State and his Uncle Sam, too, want tle girl who whispered, abashed by mountaineer, thus armed to the teeth.

Abounding good-will for Mr. Taft Carolina. There are Republicans who those distant mountains, swear under their breath and there are other Republicans who laugh at them and all this simply because Mr. Taft, who must have had his eye on Judge Connor very early in the fight, picked that gentleman to wear the silken robe in the Federal Court, where he will so soon be seen on the bench. There are some Republican prophets, too, for one of them said in February he was ready to bet that a lot of his people would be sorry of Mr. Taft before six months passed, but after they had had their fill of this sort of thing and had blown off steam they would see that Mr. Taft knew very well what he was doing. This was long before the judgeship matter became prominent. But to return to Mr. Taft. He has set himself very high with the best people of this It is proper to say a Baptist church State, unquestionably. He was referred lotte, as being a strikingly fine man, That smile of Mr. Taft gets next to one, somehow. It is one of those beaming smiles with the personal feature looming large. Atlanta Journal The rapidity with which civilization s advancing leaves but few parts of the world isolated and inaccessible. The acting president of the board of communications has sent an order to the telegraph administration in Shanghai directing it to obtain from foreign firms tenders for wireless telegraphic installations which the government desires to establish between the Altat mountains and Ahsien in the northwest of Chinese Turkestan. The question of a wireless telegraph installation in the interior was pointed out by the administration as one a photograph exactly like this or of the most important needs of China crayon either.
