As I have been stopping here a short while I thought I would write you a few facts about Grundy county, Ten-

The portion of the county round about Tracy City and for miles away is a natural bed of coal -some places three different layers.

I met an old gentleman here by the name of Capt. Sam. Dunavant, who gave me a hearty welcome noted among Old Virginia landlords before the Civil war. Capt. Jack, his son, is a finelooking young man and a hustler on a rail road contract. They have a seven mile contract on the Nunley Ridge extension. They have three sub-contracts and are working on the entire line about 175 hands. They have quite a number of good energetic foremen who can move dirt and rock in a hurry. They have a good commissary and a handsome young Clerk by the name of J. W. Avery, who weighs 228 pounds and is well known here, especially among the ladies.

Their book keeper, I believe, is Turner, who seems to be a quiet old man and don't say much, but I judge from the looks of his eyes he would date. The work is well systemvote the dry ticket every time atized, and every teacher seems ne had an opportunity.

They told me that they had an old negro in camp who wanted them to build a church and have the camp incorporated so they could make and sell whiskey like they did in spects. "Norf Carlina."

It was the largest opening in its Oil Company, Cleveland, O. history, and many more have since come in. There are many children of school age throughout the State who ought to bein school. If they are educated at the proper time they become independent and self sustaining, but if let grow up in ignorance they too often become charges upon the communities.

Practical carpentry and woodwork and farming and gardening and printing are taught to the boys, and the girls are taught practical sewing, cooking and general domestic work. Many of the children go out into various parts of the State and become independent, and do as well as, and even better than, the average member of their respective families.
