PRESIDENT ENDORSES RED CROSS SEALS.

Extensive Plans Made for North Carolina's Biggest Season.

President Wilson stopped in the busy whirl of his strenuous political campaign to endorse the Red Cross Seal movement and the work of the Anti-Tuberculosis Association. He says: "May I take this occasion to express to you my deep interest in the work of the National Anti-Tuberculosis Association and my hope that its work is growing in efficiency and extent from year to year? May I not particularly express my interest in the Red Cross Christmas seal, whose sale has been the means of raising funds for the work? It seems to me that this is an particularly interesting and sensible way of enabling the people of the country to give this great work their support."

The Red Cross Seal movement is getting well under way in North Carolina for its most successful season. Dr. L. B. McBrayer of the State Sanatorium is again executive secretary and has chosen an efficient corps of directors and assistants. By Thanksgiving it is expected that every town in the State will have arranged through a chairman or a committee for the sale of Red Cross Seals during the Christmas season. This movement affords every town an opportunity for doing something to aid the fight against tuberculosis both at home and throughout the State.

EVEN PARTY PAPERS WERE DISGUSTED.

Of course since the campaign is over it is time to forget some of the things we thought then, but just to show that Hughes made a bad impression on many of his own party we print the following extracts from Republican papers.

From the New York Tribune, which supported Hughes:

"And who is there that has forgotten the chill that came with the first words of Mr. Hughes? Who is there who can or will forget the sense of disappointment, or grief, or disillusionment, that came with the opening address of the new candidate? A world was on fire; abroad the whole fabric of human society was in the throes of a tremendous struggle; at home the very foundations of our unity and our existence were threatened, and in the face of all this the man to whom we had turned for deliverance could find no braver words and no loftier sentiment than those which have fallen from the lips of cart-tail orators since political campaigns began.

"We asked him to give us just a little of light and of leading; we asked him to speak just one word that should put courage and self-respect and old-fashioned patriotism into our hearts, and he talked to us of jobs, patronage, postoffices and place-holders. We asked him to give us an echo of those ideas and ideals which had stirred the Progressive party and made its great revolt one of the most memorable and hopeful things in our national life, and he responded with the gross and sordid materialism of the campaign orators who twenty years ago spoke to the order of Mark Hanna."

And then there is William Allen White, of Kansas, Bull Moose National Committeeman, in whose paper, the Emporia Gazette, there is this: "The Country asked for Roosevelt and they gave it Hughes—Hughes and Fairbanks."

"A convention that was a sort of compromise between a directors' meeting and a memorial service, nominating two estimable mutes who went sighing through America over the vanity of human frailty, who could conduct nothing but a funeral. And the gorgeously funny part of the spectacle was that the mourners, big and little, presumed to talk Americanism, and when they talked about it they crossed themselves and raised their eyes heavenward as if Americanism were some sort of sacred formula.

"Americanism is red-blooded Americanism is fundamentally democratic. Americanism is robust, sturdy, hilarious, rampant. It is something that holds 'the glory and freshness of a dream."

"But barring the lusty whacks from the Colonel's busy battle-axe, we had in this campaign for Americanism nothing but tears and vain regrets. These tears and vain regrets did not move the South. The South was partisan, and it viewed the mournful spectacle casually. But in the West there was a definite feeling that the whole procession was a fake."

Sufferer From Indigestion Relieved. "Before taking Chamberlain's Tablets my husband suffered for several years from indigestion, causing him to have pains in the stomach and distress after eating. Chamberlain's Tablets relieved him of these spells right away," writes Mrs. Thomas Casey, Geneva, N. Y. Obtainable everywhere.
