Child welfare specialists in Washington are watching a homemaking experiment in North Carolina with a great deal of interest.

Not only do the Washington officials have their eyes peeled but also many state welfare agencies are watching for results.

Since late summer and early fall, the three North Carolina counties of Transylvania, Wake and Warren, have instituted a homemaker service for rural areas.

The way it works is simple, although the program entails a good deal of work for the state agency involved. The homemaker is a specialist in taking care of children. When a mother is incapacitated, undergoing an operation or is confined because of some illness, the homemaker moves in and runs the household.

Usually, it is for a temporary period, averaging from two to six weeks. Last July, the federal government appropriated $13,320 to the Child Welfare Service in Raleigh for this purpose.

Director of the North Carolina program is Miss Jane Elliot who works under the supervision of the State Board of Pocic Welfare Commissioner, Dr. Ellen Winston. The office is in Raleigh.

The idea of the program, the U. S. Children's Bureau in Washington says, is to continue the parent-child relationship. Rather than uproot the child from his home environment when the mother is unable to care for him temporarily and no aunt or grandmother is there to help out, the homemaker, a Civil Service worker moves in. In some rural areas, it turns out at times that it is necessary for the homemaker to stay 24 hours around the clock.

The North Carolina homemaking service is unique for two main reasons: (1) it is the first instance where the federal government is appropriating funds in cooperation with the state agencies and (2) it also is the first time that the service has been extended to rural areas.

The results have been good and workers in the service are enthusiastic. Miss Maud Morlock of the Social Service Division of the Children's Bureau in Washington, says that the department is receiving many letters and calls from state agencies throughout the country who are extremely interested in the North Carolina program.

The homemaker, Miss Morlock says, goes into a home that cannot be handled by either the parent or relation and just takes over. She cooks, cleans, and looks after the children and even gets the man off to work with his dinner pail full.

It's something new but it is catching on quick. Homemaking in the future, the Children's Bureau hopes, will replace unsettled homes and keep the children happy.

There was a considerable drop in cash receipts from livestock and products and farm crops on North Carolina farms during January and February 1948 as compared with the same time last year.

This was announced by the Agriculture Department Wednesday. According to the Department, sales on North Carolina farms decreased more than 13 million dollars.

During the months of January and February this year, cash receipts totaled $56,850,000 as against $74,950,000 in the two-months period last year.

Crops in this year's period netted only $35,296,000 while $53,686,000 was received last year. Livestock and products brought in $21,563,000 in January and February this year above the $21,264,000 in cash receipts recorded in the 1947 period.

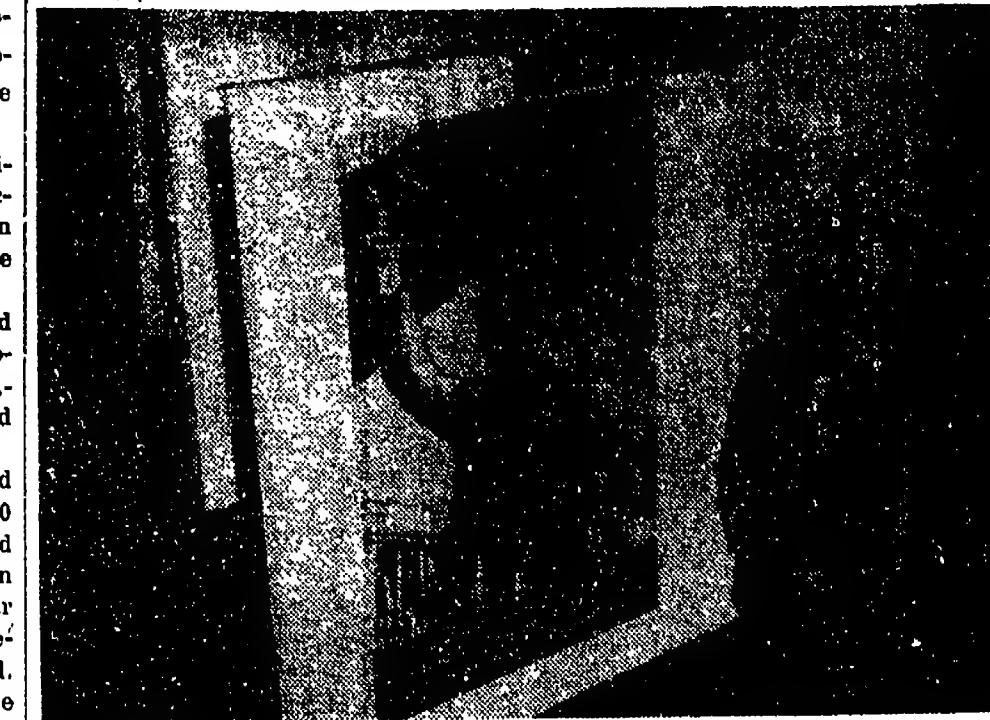

This drop in cash receipts was due no doubt, to a large extent to the fact that there are less chickens on North Carolina farms this year than there were last year, although North Carolina was the biggest producer of chickens in the South Atlantic area. The Agriculture Department reported that on January 1, 1947, there were 12,111 while on the same date this year the total was 10,532.

The Department also found a decline in cash receipts by North Carolina chicken farmers and in gross income from 1946 to 1947. Receipts in 1946 totaled $12,553,000 with a gross income of $21,934,000. In 1947, the Department showed the respective figures to be $11,694,000 and $21,161,000.

However, the nation as a whole showed a record high total of gross income from chickens and eggs in 1947.

North Carolina contributed 980 million eggs in 1946 and 981 million eggs last year.

Cherry Blossom Festival, with princesses representing each state and territory.

Pretty Miss Rose Antoinette Cauble, of Wadesboro and Washington, daughter of Assistant Attorney General and Mrs. Theron Lamar Cauble, was Miss North Carolina.

The climax of this festival came at the Raleigh Hotel one night, when the wheel was spun. And where it stopped the name of the state or territory under the pointer determined the Queen of the Festival. Miss Cauble would have made a fine queen, but the wheel didn't stop on North Carolina. It stopped on Delaware, the nation's smallest state geographically, but on that wheel it had as much space as North Carolina. That made Miss Delaware the festival queen.

Miss Cauble, who is 16, thus became one of the princesses of the festival, serving in the queen's court for the remainder of the festivities.

The Rural Electrification Administration has approved a loan of $150,000 to the Piedmont Electric Membership Corporation of Hillsborough. The loan is to be used for construction of new lines in five counties. The counties affected are Orange, Durham, Person, Caswell and Granville. The President of the Cooperative is W. F. Shaw, of Hillsborough.

Mathews also conferred with other Agriculture officials to see if anything could be done to relieve the economic burden brought on a few peach growers by the frost early in the season. However, he did not seem to think much could be done.

Visitors at the office of Sen. William B. Umstead recently included William A. Creech, of Smithfield, and J. R. Yancey, of Oxford.

Creech has just been graduated from the University of North Carolina, and is in Washington seeking a foreign service appointment with the State Department.

Yancey, a veteran of World War II, will enter Walter Reed Hospital for treatment of injuries received during his service in the Army.

Sen. Clyde R. Hoey says he believes the bill to repeal margarine taxes has a good chance of passing the Senate when it comes to the floor for a vote.

The North Carolina Senator pointed out that a test vote had already been taken when an amendment was tacked onto the tax bill which would have repealed margarine assessments. At that time, the vote was 33 to 45 against the amendment, but Hoey said many of the Senators believed this was not the proper place to try to repeal the margarine tax.

Nevertheless, he said, this shows there is a solid bloc of senators against the discriminatory tax.

It is believed that the measure will go to the Agriculture Committee of which Hoey is a member. If it does, Hoey says there is little chance that the committee will "bottle up" the (Continued on page five)
