

Entered at the post office at High Point, N. C., for transmission through the mails as second class matter.

ONE thing, at least, stands to the credit of Tom Reed—he does not knife the men who made his public life possible. Such a task is reserved for John G. Carlisle.—Atlanta Constitution.

Mr. Carlisle has been held up before the country by the free silver wing of his party as the meanest of all. If he didn't strike back when the opportunity presented itself he could hardly be called a man.

"TRADITIONS have put us in party lines, and partisanship has developed an arrogance that assumes to dictate all policies, while the individual citizen has been robbed of his will and made the slave of party rule. An attempt to assert personal freedom and express patriotic sincerity of faith has been met by social ostracism, loss of business caste, and a flood of vile denunciation. By these methods, methods as cruel as the flames of the Inquisition, men have been driven to do the will of party. The price of freedom is death—social, business and political death. It comes at as high a price today as it did in the days of Leonidas. The hope we have is in the fact that there are some men among us who will have it at any price. They are the forerunners of a genuine kingdom. To them freedom and death are better than slavery and existence."—Dr. J. C. Kilgo.

A TRIBUTE OF RESPECT

Four years ago, when we came to High Point, "a stranger in a strange land," one among the first to offer us the hand of friendship was Dr. L. I. Bodenheimer, and from that day until he was called to his reward, we enjoyed and appreciated his friendship.

Dr. Bodenheimer was a man of striking individuality, full of quiet humor, yet blessed with more than ordinary sense. He cared as little for the opinion of the world as anyone we ever knew. When fully convinced of the righteousness of any cause, either civil or religious, he took a decided stand, and there to use his own words, "he'd stay through the heavens fall."

Dr. Bodenheimer was a close student of the Bible, few being more so than he. In some of the talks we had with him, that came from his heart, we were enabled to see the depth of his feelings. He knew why he trusted, and verily he could say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

Our hearts go out in sympathy to the loved ones who mourn his loss; our tears flow with theirs, for oh, we too know what it is—

"So long for the touch of a vanished hand, The sound of a voice that is still."

He spoke with loving praise of the devotedness of his children during his long illness, and these words must come back to them now and in some measure assuage their deep grief in their great affliction.

This is by no means intended as a review of his life work—let some more worthy pen than mine do that; this is but a tribute of respect to his memory.

With us there will ever hang on Memory's wall a picture of this rugged old man whom we knew and admired in the sunset of his life, and who honored us with his friendship.

Servant of God, well done! Thy warfare now is over. You fought the fight, you kept the faith, you've gained the farther shore. CLEO CUNNINGHAM WOFFORD, High Point, N. C., Sept. 20.

MISS KEARNEY

Notwithstanding the fact that the town was very much interested and enthused over the waterworks victory and the celebration thereof about the time set for Miss Belle Kearney's lecture, the M. R. church was over half filled with those eager to hear this famous woman. And they were not disappointed. Miss Kearney's talk from beginning to end was highly interesting and instructive. Her theme was on the prevalent evils of the day and the attitude of nation, state, county and city to the same. She showed many inconsistencies in our government in dealing with the great questions that weigh so heavily upon the hearts and minds of many good people of the land. Miss Kearney's appeal to the young people was exceedingly touching. Like many of the leaders in reform, she believes that the hope of the country is in teaching the young people the enormity of the evils which have been treated lightly by those who should acknowledge the seriousness of many of them and lend their influence to their correction.

This was Miss Kearney's second visit to High Point and she delighted her hearers on both occasions. Not only were her talks pleasing, but she did good.

DRUG STORE BARGAINS

In this age of bargains people are even expecting them in the drug stores. Have you ever stopped to think what drug store bargains mean? They mean impure drugs and medicines, substitution, and short weight and measure. Suppose the druggist, in buying his chemicals, should buy where he can get them cheapest, without regard to quality? What would be the result? Your doctor's prescription, instead of being beneficial to the patient, would prove injurious. Your physician doesn't want cheap drugs in his prescription. Our drugs are pure; our prices reasonable. We have no bargain counter. W. A. King, Registered Pharmacist.
