THRICE IS HERO OF PRISON CAMP

Story of the Deeds of Auguste the Little French Tailor.

NOW HE WANTS TO FIGHT

Three Times He Wrecks Plant Where Asphyxiating Gas Bombs Are Made and Twice Escapes to His Own Lines.

Paris.—It was in Nantes that I met this little man I am going to tell you about, and I think I will tell you the queer, unexpected way one may run gainst a hero. I found him on the Nantes is one of the twelve cities of France that have statues in the Place de la Concorde, in Paris. One passes through there on the way to and from coast towns of southern Brittany and, having come from St. Nazaire, I was waiting in the Gare d'Orieans in Nantes for the train to Paris and meanwhile trying to find my porter to see if he had all my luggage gathered

I found him at the far end of the qual, with my bags at his feet, talking to a young girl wearing the Breton cosffe and the wide-sleeved Breton cos-

"Auguste has come," the girl was saying as I approached. "He arrived ast night from Paris, and came to our ouse this morning

My porter touched his cap to me "Everything is here, monsieur," he said, "and the train will stop directly epposite us on the No. 1 line. This is my sister Madeleine, who has come to tell me about Auguste."

Very Proud of Auguste.

"Auguste is our cousin," explained Madeleine, "and he is coming to the station to see my brother. My brother was his favorite when we were chil-dren. Here he is now!" she cried. And I turned and saw a group of three advancing along the qual.

A lame girl was on one side and on the other was a tall man in baggy corduroy trousers, while between them was a small man, wearing trousers that were too long for him and a brown sack coat and gray cap. He

A grayish stubble of beard ornamented his cheeks, and and efficient wireless receiving and when he took his cap off I saw that he was beginning to get bald. He looked not so much like an old man hidden in the folds of a cloak so as like one who had recently been that it would be invisible to an unthrough a severe sickness. There were deep lines in his cheeks and suspecting person. The sending apparatus consists of a box in which myriad little wrinkles around his eyes, while the skin hung loose and flabby on his neck and his complexion was of a grayish pallor.

After the affectionate greetings were over my porter turned to me and said: "This is my cousin Auguste, monsieur. He is just home from Germany."

"Then you are a soldier?" I asked as I shook hands with him. "Not yet," he replied. "The government has given me fifteen days' leave before I join my regiment."

"Auguste has done his service," said whole incident, just as it happened to Madeleine. They were all very proud e, so that you can see in what a of their cousin and stood close around him in a little circle.

"But yes," said Auguste. "I did my railroad quai in a French provisional town in the shape of an undersized tailor, slightly bald and forty-two since for my two weeks' training. I was just coming home last year when the war broke out, and they made me prisoner.

"Oh," I said. "So you have been in one of the internment camps."

"But you have come home every year?" "To do my training."

"And now you have escaped and come back to France." "To fight for France," he said.

I marveled at that small man, with the little bald spot, the stubbly gray beard, the sickbed pallor and the baggy trousers that were too long for he said. "But soon they began to bring in soldiers, French, Russian and English, and then there were very many of us. They did not treat us very well except when the American ambassador came to inspect the camp. We were well treated and well fed then, but after he had gone we lived on bread and water for a week to make up for the expense while he was there.

"Did you have to work?" "Only the French. The English and Russians did not have to work, but they built a factory for making as-phyxiating gas shells and the French prisoners had to work in that fac

"Did you work in it?" "I wrecked it three times," he re plied, "It made 40,000 shells a week, The first time I damaged the furnace and it took them four days to repair it. Then I spoiled the acid tanks and they ran for more than four weeks, making shells that were worthless before they found it out. The third time I wrecked the furnace again rd it took three days to repair it. But then they began to suspect me, mon-They watched me too closely I could be of no more use there, and well, drew a plan of the factory and escaped. It is for that plan that the government has given me fifteen days leave before I join my regiment."

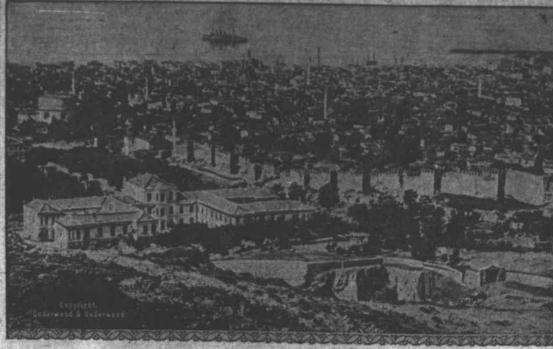

"Was it hard to get away?" "My wife did not want me to go She was afraid they would capture me and shoot me."

Europeane Are Book Buyers. In the United States only one person in 7,300 buys a book in the course of a year, while in Great Britain it is one in 3,800; in France it is about the same; in Germany and Japan it is rather better, and in Switzerland it is one in 872. Cheaper books, in pape covers, account for some of this differ ence; but, whatever the cause, it remains true that the Europeans buy twice as many books per capita as we do.-Atlantic Monthly.
