Entered as second-class mail matter February 25, 1910, at the posoffice at Ahoskie, North Carolina, under the Act of March 3, 1878.

Postoffice rows have been daily, weekly, and monthly occurrences over the state of North Carolina during the past year. The latest and one of the commonest cases of dirty politics which has come to our attention, started in Durham last week when the clerks of the postoffice united in a petition to have the postmaster, J. O. Lunsford removed at once, His term will expire on September 1st. We do not know anything of the particulars in this case, but would guess that somewhere around on the outside there is some one who wants the job, is not particular how he gets it, and will not wait until September 1st if he can help it.

Now that we have been properly "attended to" by Editor Saunder of the Elizabeth City Independent and delivered unto the Aulander Advance for further punishment if same should be necessary; all on account of having the gall to say that in our opinion Bro. Saunders was "tooting his own horn" considerably of late; we suppose there is nothing left for us to do but crawl in a hole and pull the hole in after us. But while meditating in said hole, we cannot help but think that it is largely a matter of opinion as to whether Bro. Saunders ranks yet with G. Washington, A. Lincoln and others of the days gone by. Still there is no accounting when she kissed the cow, so if the

A substantial part of the income of $1,000,000 for the next few years has been set aside by the Milbank Fund of New York to demonstrate in several districts how tuberculosis can be controlled in American communities. Announcement of this fact was

The demonstration to be conducted is in the nature of a memorial to Mrs. Anderson. The Milbank Fund proposes to initiate a series of demonstrations based upon the successful Health and Tuebreulosis Demonstration, conducted for the last five years by the National Tuebrculosis Association. The purpose of the demonstration is to determine whether any American community, with proper organization and at reasonable expense, can reduce its tuberlosis death rate, as has been done in Framingham, to a nominal minimum, and to ascertain the proper organization and the per capita cost of such undertakings applied to larger cities and rural cities and rural counties.

Following is an account of the doings of one Rev. Charles J. Weilberg, in our neighboring county of Northhampton, as appearing in the Raleigh News and Observer.

Dellinger complains that the preacher fleeced him out of $4,100 under promise of vast profits. Lists of accredited companies and salesmen carry neither the name of the wild cat preacher nor the Black Panther Oil Company. Neither has any business in North Carolina, but this fact gets Dellinger nothing of his $4,100 back. Mr. Wade directed the sheriff of Northampton to make tirely for nothing. There always was the arrest and hold the salesman for Dazzled by the promise of 100 per lifecent dividends and disarmed by the ministerial earnestness and apparent honesty of the preacher, Dellinger bought a lot of Black Panther stock several months ago. The preacher got 10 per cent of the returns, $410 for inducing his parishioner to sink good money in the Black Panther. Dividends failed to show up on schedule. Letters explained that the officers were away, and a meeting could not be held to declare a dividend. Mr. Dellinger was counselled to be patient, and later it was suggested to him that further investment of 30 per cent would materially enhance his previous subscription. Going to the preacher-salesman for counsel and comfort, Dellinger was told that nothing could be done about it. The fleeced citizen got more and more desperate, and Saturday wrote Mr. Wade the siutation, concluding co-operation, farm management, and with the plea, "For God's sake help me get even with him." REFORMING JIMMY

Clure Newspaper Synd

Alvina had fallen in love with Jim mie O'Toole and the whole town held its breath.

"She'll fall out of love as quickly as she came in, Jimmy'll see to that," prophesied her younger brother, George

"It's an awful disgrace," walled her sister Marie. "The very idea! We, of the best old family in the county, the aristocratic Moreheads-and Jimmy O'Toole, the black sheep of even such a family as the O'Toole's! Besides, he's younger than she !"

looked somewhat embarrassed as a slim young woman, her refined, sweet features fairly shining with happiness, came into the room.

"Oh, you've been discussing me; don't deny it," she laughed.

"My dear, the whole town is dis cussing you!" her sister deplored. "I don't care. Neither does Jimmie!"

with defiant, good humor. "Oh, Jimmle O'Toole, he's used to notoriety." If Alvina winced no one noticed except her mother. "My dear," said the latter gently, "I am very much concerned about you. Jimmle O'Toole has not the best of reputations and I cannot see how such a marriage will bring you any happiness."

"May I add a word?" asked the brother and, without waiting for permission, "you'll never marry him, be cause Jimmie isn't the sticking kind. He's flattered at present that he has been able to bowl over the most conservative girl in town."

Alvina's quick eye went from one to the other. "You all have forgotten one thing-that we love each other. There's another thing, too, I'm going to reform Jimmie."

Things went along beautifully for a week or two, Alvina glowing with happiness, the town and her family still skeptical. Then one evening Jimmie missed an engagement and Alvina waited in vain.

It was George who brought the bad news. "Well, Jimmie's fallen off-I knew it," with a grim laugh.

"Of course, I did, too," came Alvina's surprising reply; "he is no angel-it's difficult to break bad habits all at once. I've been quite prepared for one or two slipbacks !"

The family only sighed. The next day Jimmle appeared repentant, full of new promises.

There were several more slipbacks and Alvina's face became slightly drawn and anxious.

Jimmie's calls became less frequent and the family felt that the end of Alvina's love affair was near, while Alvina herself grew pale and pinched-

It happened one evening when Alvina waited with growing nervousness for Jimmle. They were to hear a lec ture on thought-control, and he had promised faithfully to be there at seven-thirty. Alvina waited, her nervous ness fanned by the family's remarks. The clock struck eight, eight-thirty, and no Jimmy in sight. At nine o'clock Alvina burst into tears and went to her room, locking the door.

"I think she is writing him a letter -breaking the engagement," remarked her mother to the other two. "Poor child, and she loved him so much !"

The American public leaps nimbly from one great crisis to another and public sentiment and interest is slow and difficult to awaken. Just at present a nation-wide railroad strike on top of a coal strike already in progress is threatened. Still the dear people are but faintly interested when the consequences of such a thing, if it did come to pass would be trial. very serious indeed. But the public has heard the old cry of "Wolf!" before, therefore the present state of mind on the subject. At that though, it is a sorry state of affairs existing when the squabbles of a few men who control the railroads on one hand, and some labor leaders trying to hold their jobs on the other, should have the power to even threaten the convenience and well-being of 100 millions of people. Come what may though, the folks of Eastern North Carolina have may things to be thankful for; it would take these proposed strikes and several more some time to make unindurable in these parts.

After an hour's shopping she called up Jimmie and asked him to take her for lunch.

"Jimmie," Alvina was saying at a tucked away table in a tea room, "I've given up reforming you !"

"That means good-by, I guess," he deducted with a sigh, high relieved, half unhappy. "Not that I blame you, Alvina, you've been an angel and I'm not good enough to buckle your shoes But I want to say this much, dear, that all you've done has not been en a remnant of self-respect in me, a love and admiration for the fine things of

"Jimmy O'Toole," Interrupted Alvina smillingly, "I've given up reforming you, but not loving you! I've been a prude and a poke and I expected the impossible of you. Look here," she unwrapped a bundle, "all the newest sporting magazines," and bringing a shining article from her bag, "a cigarette case! And here," she drew from her purse two tickets, "for a musical comedy tonight! Now what do you say?"

Jimmie did not touch the things be fore him, but took Alvina's slim fingers in his brown hands, and his voice when he spoke was husky and low. "That are the finest woman I know you that I love you too much ever to give you up and that I will make no more promises in the future. This partner ship will be a fifty-fifty proposition because I've grown to like some of your books and ideas."

She smilled at him through her tears and whispered, "Nothing really counts, except that we love each other !'
