AYCOCK AT JACKSONVILLE.

Governor Aycock on Universal Education Before Southern Educational Association at Jacksonville Dec 10th, 1904.

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen: The late Senator Hoar in an address which he delivered at Charleston a few years ago, used this language: 'The American people have learned to know as never before the quality of the southern stock; to value its noble contribution to the American character; its courage in war, its attachment to home and state; its love for rural life, its capacity for great affection and generous emotions; its aptness for command, -above all this -constancy, the virtue above all virtues without which no people can be either great or free.'

When we read this splendid tribute to the south all of our hearts swelled with pride and were glad. We rejoiced to find appreciation at the north and a rarely beautiful expression of it of our race character.

Today it seems to me that we have less respect upon the thought and action of the nation than at any period of our history.

Before the war, between the states, southern statesmen directed the policies of the nation and filled the largest place in the eye of the people. They wrote few books but their speeches illuminated every subject which they touched and set the fashion of political thought.

Universal education is therefore the imperative and only remedy for our loss of power in the nation. But how shall we be trained? Are we to forget the memories of the past; to break away from our traditions; to join with those who are clamoring for the adoption of the convictions which we have combated for many years? I think not.

We must put away vainglory and boasting and take an impartial inventory of all the things that we have and are; and these things can only come to us through the training of all our citizenship. We have in the south today our Hills, our Lamars, our Becks, our Vests, our Vanes and our Hamptons (all of them products of the period before the war) but no man can go throughout the country and lay his hand on the head of any single child and say that here is a Lamar, here is a Vane, or a Vest or a Hill, or a Hampton or a Beck.

active neighborhoods in order that we may have the benefit of competition and of appreciation. You may educate your son and daughter to the fullest extent possible, giving to them the learning of all the world and put them after their education in a community where there are no other educated people and they will fall to develop and grow as they would if they lived in a community where there was general culture.

When the trainers of horses sought to reduce the time in which it took to trot a mile, they did not go and pick out a particular colt and train him for the track, but the trainers all over the world were developing colts.

Men must win their great victories after the same fashion. In the race of life, if they are to win a victory worth winning, they must run against thoroughbreds. If we pass under the wire ahead of a scrub there is no honor in it.

We want the schools to find all of the strongest and best and then we want to put these strongest and best in competition one with the other until the fullest powers of each shall be developed. In doing this we shall get the largest contribution to society.

If these things be true, and that they are, I am assured, then it must needs be that the finest things can be done only by education of the masses. It is education that finds and brings out for us the noblest and the best. It stimulates the best to the utmost exertion and fullest development by putting them in competition with others just as well trained as themselves and it gives to us the noblest and most appreciative audiences.

membering a moment after it is delivered that did not come after the speaker had paid for it in advance. No song was ever sung that raised the hearts of the people and made them long for better things that was not sung after the singer had suffered all the song. No preacher ever stirred the souls of his congregation and put them to yearning after 'a closer walk with God' whose sermon was not made after his own hands had been nailed upon the Cross by the side of his Lord and Master.

We are fighting today a more terrific battle with the forces of ignorance than he was fighting then. If I had the right to use the great words of this mighty man I should call out tonight and say: 'President Alderman, President McEver, President Mell, Chancellor Kirkland, Chancellor Hill, President Thach, President Falton, President Boyd, President Talifer, President Prather, President Jesse, you must come up! Bring all your corps of truth and light and power. Open your batteries, for the conflict is now on with the enemy. The powers of ignorance and darkness are arrayed against us and the fight must be to a finish. Tell Hill he must come up.'

OUR RALEIGH LETTER.

Inauguration of Governor Glenn—Scenes at the Beginning of the Legislature.

Raleigh, January 9.—The inauguration of Governor Glenn and the other State officers, Wednesday, January 11th, will be the event of the present week.

A large crowd will be here from a distance, especially from Governor Glenn's home town and county, a special train having been chartered for the occasion.

It is authoritatively announced that Governor Glenn's private secretary (over whose personality there has been much speculation) will be General James D. Glenn, of Greensboro, who is the Governor's brother.

The scenes presented up at the capitol this time did not vary much from those that have been witnessed on the first Wednesday after the first Monday in every 'odd year' for many a decade.

There were the same character of experienced legislators—men who have served term after term in one branch or the other of the General Assembly, and as a rule without seeking the office.

But this class is smaller in number than the writer has known them to be in at least ten years.

The 'new men' are more in evidence than for many years. By this we do not mean that they are necessarily undeveloped, immature, inexperienced men; for quite a percentage of the new men, while inexperienced as legislators, are not lacking in general business experience or worldly wisdom.

Most of them will develop into efficient representatives of their respective counties and some of them will become leaders in the committee rooms and on the floor of the Senate and House before session has far opened itself.

But there is the other style of 'new member'—he always comes, and is here again, but in smaller numbers than usual.

This is the self-important, fussy, posing young fellow, whose head has been turned by the 'great honor' that some inconsequential county in a far-off corner of the State has 'bestowed upon him' (after he had beaten every bush in his lawless drumming for the nomination).

I am looking at one of them out of the corner of an eye as these lines are being written. What overpowering emotions they must be to cause that manly shirt front to heave and swell and puff its importance into the faces of his colleagues!

The world rests upon his broad legislative shoulders—and he knows it!

See that penetrating expression of self-consciousness with which he translates the occupants of the newspaper reporters' desk.

Regard the overpowering sense of responsibility with which the very air expelled from his thorough-bred nostrils is laden!

This is a typical sample of the egotistical young gentlemen (usually a 'professional man') who come to Raleigh expecting to make history—and to record it largely through the legislative reports printed in the newspapers.

We are disposed to help him—hence these few lines of introduction.

Farther on in the session he is going to furnish us with an autograph copy of his first speech and patronize us with the suggestion that he will permit us to print it, and thus satiate a clamoring crowd of readers who are already impatiently waiting to devour it.

We know him well, though he has never met us before.

During the last three sessions of the General Assembly this writer has reported the Senate branch, and I find myself today, at noon—just as the gavel of Lieut-Governor Turner is about to call the Senate to order—looking into more strange faces than on any previous similar occasion.

today most of them are busy with with some useful and honorable and laudable work. Some have been called up higher in the official ranks, and nearly all remain on some of the fields of life's activities—performing well their parts, and awaiting the final roll-call of which we must all answer some day.

In the House there are only fourteen of the old members returned.

In their places have come good men and true men, who will serve well their State and some of whom will make their marks upon the legislative state of fame before the fourth day of March.

Among the old Senators who are again here this session are: C. S. Vann, of the first district who has figured prominently in the last three sessions; an industrious legislator and an able Senator.

Donnell Gilliam, of the fifth district, who served Edgecombe county so well in the last Legislature, an able lawyer and an eloquent speaker.

D. J. Aaron, of the ninth district, whom the people of Governor Aycock's home county have honored themselves by sending to the Senate on a previous occasion.

J. A. Long, of the eighteenth district, the active, able and experienced business man who last session so effectively represented the county of Person, and from whom no county will have a more influential representative on the floor of the Senate.

A. J. Burton, of the twentieth district, the able and successful lawyer of Reidsville, who so effectively represented Rockingham county two years ago.

C. A. Webb, of the thirty-seventh district, the Asheville lawyer, who figured prominently and influentially in the Senate two years ago; a well equipped, alert legislator.

W. W. Stringfield, of the thirty-eighth district, the popular Haywood county mountaineer, who made his presence felt on several occasions in 1903; a faithful, conscientious, typical representative of the people who send him here so willingly and gladly.

J. L. Crisp, of the twenty-ninth district, the only Republican Senator here two years ago; a man who has commended the respect of all his political opponents and acquired the personal friendship of many of them and who successfully endeavors to make his district an effective representative.

These complete the list. The other 42 Senators, now about to answer to the first day's roll-call were not here in the last Legislature although there are Senators Foshee, of Durham, Mason, of Northampton, Ward, of Craven, Scales, of Guilford, and Pearson, of Burke, who have served as Senators in previous Legislatures.

Among other experienced legislators in the Senate this session are noted H. W. Stubbs, of Martin, who has served four terms in the House; Hector McLean, of Scotland, formerly in the House, and probably a few others whom I do not recall at this moment.

Of the entirely 'new men' there are some particularly able and eloquent ones, and this Senate, in its personnel and record of service, is going to compare very favorably indeed with all its predecessors.

The most important bills introduced in the Legislature so far are those to repeal the anti-law law (which makes the place of delivery the place of sale of liquor); to appropriate $5,000 for a statue to General Matt W. Ransom; to make the carrying of concealed weapons a felony. All these bills were introduced in the House.

In the Senate the first liquor bill of the session was passed—the Webb bill, which eliminates the little stills of less capacity than 36 gallons per day—and although a local measure, applicable only to the city of Asheville, its prompt passage by the vote of 34 to 14, indicates the sentiment of the Senate on the liquor question generally.

R. D. Bynum, the slayer of Deacon Alfred, who was captured last week, is now in jail here, having been formally committed last Friday by Mayor Powell, without bond.

The best lawyers in Raleigh have been engaged to defend him. It is said that the defense will be insanity. The next term of Wake court meets this week, but he may not be tried at this term.
