THE STATE GUARD.

During this week will be witnessed here one of the most strikingly beautiful and interesting spectacles preservers of the people's peace and the defenders of a nation's rights, enjoyed and admired; and as a recreation for the young men participating in the demonstration, will command general approval. But to those who look below the surface, there is a much deeper significance than is conveyed by the splendors of uniform, the perfection of the drill, the subordination to discipline. To such observers will occur the reflection that to this small disciplined band, this voluntary organization of State Guard is the only representaorable men and officers, Gov. It ranks with base ball, Mahone men—in which to reflect rather than with what calls for sacrifice of time, and toil, and may be of life. This prejudice should give way to reason. No country can be era in the history of the State, safe without some resource in time or by an imitation of all that is of peril. And with us, perils certainly threaten or rise from the passions of the populace, from thousands of causes that disturb the social fabrics. In these perils, the public calls on the State executive for aid or protection. Upon whom the Governor call? There is the state, the south and the can the Governor call? There is nation open to republicanism—to no militia in existence. If he orders the county sheriff to do his duty like Mahone. upon whom can the official call? of what avail may be a sheriff's hope, summened, it may be, in part from the element he is called upon to of Virginia now have. compose?
