A LAKESIDE MUSING.

A PRETTY ROOM IT WAS, WARM AND RICH IN ITS COLORINGS.

Presently There Came to Arthur Ains Woman's Dress-He Said, in "Husky with Horror," Etc.

Natalie, my darling, Arthur is here."
The girl, a tall, lissome creature, with great violet eyes in whose dusky depths many a man had sought to read his fate, rose quickly from the fauteuil on which she had been lying when her mother spoke, and paused for a moment ere she entered the apartment where Arthur entered the spartment where Arthur Ainsleigh was pacing nervously to and fro. A pretty room it was, warm and rich in all its colorings, and as a great shaft of sunshine streamed through the oriel window its golden brilliancy was so softened and mellowed by the tinted glass that it fell in subdued radiance on statue and vase, on painting and drapery, seeming at last to lose itself in gentle blending with the bright hues of an oriental rug which lay in front of the fireplace.

To the westward, where in summer stretched away in vernal beauty the lawn that was such an attractive feature of Cyclone grange, there was little to be seen save a great expanse of snow, across which a pleasant woman, with a bundle of fagots, gathered in the neighboring copse, on her back, wearily trudged. A broken sawbuck that stood out gaunt and haggard against an unpitying sky was the only jarring chord in an otherwise perfect

Presently there came to Arthur Ains leigh's off ear the soft frou-frou of a woman's dress, and an instant later woman's dress, and an instant later Natilie Neversink, tall and stately as a lliy, in all the virgin beauty of her bud-ding womanhood, stood beside the only man in all the wide wide world that she had ever loved, and with a tender grace that was beyond compare gave to him with the wine-red lips that o'erhung her drooping, sensitive mouth a rapturous clinging, do-not-move-or-you-will-breakyour-halter kiss that came like a revela tion to this man, who had spent nearly all of his life in Boston.

And then the girl, placing her soft, white arm caressingly about Arthur's neck, looked up to him with pleading eyes in which the mists of sorrow were fast gathering, and ere he could speak there glistened on her damask cheek a tear-the salt and silent emblem of a ghastly horror that was haunting her life and that had covered the erstwhile rose-tinted horizon of her girlhood with the black pall of an overwhelming sorrow.

"I had such a terrible dream last night darling," she said, seeing in his eyes the thoughts that his lips had not uttered—"such a weird, eerie dream, that ever since it came to me I have thought of nothing

"What is it?" he asks, drawing her more closely to him and fondling in lover fashion the coronal of fluffy hair that nestles so confidingly against the upper left-hand pocket of his vest.

"I dreamed," the girl continued, "that while I was sitting here in the parlor one bitterly cold day in the winter, when the wind was moaning over moor and through wold as if to chant a ody for the souls of those whose lives see embraces had taken away, there came to me a cupid fat and rosy as I had so often seen him depicted, but wearing about him a curious garment. It was a linen duster, and, strangest of all, it was trimmed with fur, while in his hand the little god held jauntily a silk hat. He spoke no word to me, and when I asked him why he was so queerly dressed I awoke. Was it not strange, Arthur?" "Yes," the man replied, "and the vision bodes you no good. It is an ancient belief that when a maid sees Cupid in her dreams he will in some measure assume the outward appearance of the man whom she will wed. Dost believe this, Natalie?" A convulsive shudder and a closer clasping of his hand was her only answer.

"Methink's I can interpret the vision, "Do so," was the reply.
"You say that Cupid wore a duster?"

"A linen duster?"
"Yes."

"No shoes on his feet?" "And he had a stovepipe hat?"

"Trimmed with fur?"

"It needs no sibyl," said Arthur, "to read this riddle. The answer is plain." "What is it?" she asks. Bending tenderly over her, he says in tones that are husky with horror: "You will marry an actor!"-Chicago

Total Manufacture of Chewing Gum.

The total manufacture of chewing gum in the United States is over 6,000,000 boxes a year, and as each box contains 150 pieces of gum the total sum paid by consumers 1 cent for a piece of gum, amounts to nearly $10,000,000, which would be about 20 cents per capita, on a basis of 50,000,000 population.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The soil is rich, its tobacco brings the highest prices in the market, avantage a net profit of from $15 to $150 per acre, . 25 sures of land are being cleared to rent on shares for tobacco growing.

The lands are divided into farms of from 20 to 1000 acree to suit purchasers.

The labor required in opening, me these lands has made the Town of WHITTIER a necessity, which is now a sistion on the Western North Carolina Railroad, 6 miles east of Charleston. The founder of Whittier will spare no pains or expanse to make it the most attractive and desirable resident and business town in Western N.C.

Mills, stores, residences and a fine instal are now being erected, and other manufactories will follow. Lots are donated to churches, schools, public buildings and works.

The improvements of the lands and the town requires all kinds of mechanics and laborers, and all purchasers of lands or lots can get immediate and constant employment at common labor.

Purchasers will be furnished lumber for improvements at $10 to $12 per 1000 feet, and work to pay for it.

Comfortable quarters and rations will be provided for purchasers and their families, at the mere cost of rations, until they can erect their own houses. Come right along.
