There is nothing more certain than the necessity of organization and the maintenance of party discipline, otherwise parties drop to be repeated, treated by the sources, and, beside, if people are to drink or t.se tobacco, or rather that the necessity of organization and the maintenance of party discipline, otherwise parties drop to pieces, loose disjointed fragments. Yet parties are the essentials of government. Through them, acting on a cknowledged fundamental principles, and guided by well defined precedents the laws are made and enforced, public peace and order preserved, education provided for, all of which are associated with the collection and honest disposal of the public monies. These things cannot be well done without the agency of party organization.
