The class of young men of whom the Eagle thus speaks includes the jeunesse doree, the spoiled sons of fortune of the Northern cities, whose aim it seems to be to waste the hoards their fathers have heaped up by lucky speculation; and whose whole aim in life seems to get through with it with the greatest possible speed; and exhausting all its pleasures, to rush out of it with equal haste, as young Morton did the other day in New York, sated with enjoyment and finding no new pleasure his enormous means could purchase.

The lot of the Southern youth was harder, but it is happier. The poverty, the legacy of the war, that surrounded his cradle, and beset his early footsteps, gave a robustness to his character which has given new features to Southern existence. If not so cultivated as his Northern brother, he has developed traits which are admirable. It is to the young men of the South that is due the rapid recovery from the calamithe rapid recovery from the calami-ties of war; to them that vast energy ties of war; to the war in the which has built our railroads, set in tions. motion the wheels of our factories, and given that impulse to commercial enterprises which has converted villages into cities, and made business marts of insignificant towns.

There may be exceptions; as a rule the Southern young men are W. S. Gravelys "Extra Chew, not obnexious to the censure of the Brookly Eagle. But the warning is wise: for in time the same prosperity will overwhelm the South that now floods the North; and then the day of our gilded youth will come.

In one family alons three deaths drinking water, is the worst kind of sickness A daring attempt was made by or death. Its effects are not immediate, but are none the less certain in the course of a few weeks or months. The loss of appetite, headache, tired feeling and the thousand and one symptoms which indicate the approach of disease, are certain to be felt. Water supply in the city is bad enough; but in the smaller towns and farming communities, the water is often drawn from wells that are simply drainages from barns and out houses.

Such being the terrible fact, what can be done to swert this evil? Certainly not by drinking liquors, mineral waters or aimilar concections, for they are frequently more injurious than ordinary water. The only way to avoid the above evils, is by keeping the health rows. way to avoid the above evils, is by keeping the health pure. A gentle stimulant to the digestive organs and faculties, and a strength imparting and nerve-building compound, is what the body requires, is what the people should have. Such a preparation is found in the wonderful Volins Cordial which is accomplishing so much throughout the country, and is becoming so popular. Being composed of purely vegetable elements both palatable and strengthening, it counteracts the evil effects of poisoned water, and renders their injurious elements harmless.

The striking feature of this remarkable discovery is to open up a new medical field, covery is to open up a new medical field, and almost with a flash accomplish what the and almost with a flash secomplish what the doctors have been looking for, for years, that is a pleasant medicine that or lid be taken without fear or injury; that would carry into the body new albumen, which is the great sustaining, strengthening and enlivening element of human life. Just what "springs" are to a vehicle so far as pleasant riding is concerned is albumen to the human system, so far as good health goes. Without it, you get weary, tired, have troubled thoughts, feel out of sorts, broken down and your system is open to every disease or local your system is open to every disease or local trouble.
