Their energy began to dazzle through its splendid results. Their industry and their business sagacity had created what is called the New South; wonder, curiosity, interest, were drawn to it; and that enormous porthern wealth is no longer. mous northern wealth is no longer distrustful of the South; and, impatient of new fields for employment, no longer hesitates to trust itself amid the fields, the mines, the factories of the South.

With these remarks we introduce the following from the Richmond Dispatch:

"The Baltimore Manufacturer's Record of this week devotes two pages to a review of the new enterprises started in the Southern States during the first three months of 1887. In the compilation of this information it is stated that over five thousand letters and postal cards were used. The exhibit is truly remarkable, showing that within the time mentioned there has been the most wonderful industrial activity in the South, and that all over that section the people have awakened to the vast possibilities of the future. The Record says that capital from the North and West, and even from Europe, is pouring into the South, and to the people of Dixie is due a large measure of credit for the building up of their country. There is no longer any toom even in the most sceptical mind for questioning the stability and permanency of the South's progress, and the almost unbounded prosperity which is opening up that section. This prosperity is not confined to manufacturing and mining establishments, but is gradually spreading out to all other interests. While it is true that the iron and kindred interests continue and even from Europe, is pouring Notice of Sale, to attract the largest share of attention, they are not being developed
