CITY FULL OF ENTERPRISE AND GROW ING RAPIDLY. All in all, I consider Asheville one of the most remarkable young cities in the South. To-day no city of her size is doing more to perpetuate the glory of this generation in the New South than Asheville, and I have scarcely passed a square without finding some kind of building or improvements going on. The streets are full of busy people squads of workmen are everywhere lay ing water-pipes, paving the streets and sidewalks, while the hotels are crowded to their utmost capacity, many visitors being forced to seek private boarding houses even for a few days' stay. People are pouring in here daily from every section of the Union, and there are, also, a great many Englishmen among them. The entire population seems to be thoroughly cosmopolitan, President Frank Coxe receives almost be hard to find. Nearly everybody,

This week a company was organized to construct a line from Atlanta to Baltimore via Asheville, and they expect to be at work on it within sixty or ninety days. At present the connections west are abominable, but efforts are making to have them improved.

THE RAILROADS

An idea of the strides which have been taken in the matter of handling up and melt the mist away, when the the tobacco products at Asheville of the richest counties of North Carolina may be had from the following statistics, which are from trustworthy sources: For the year 1883 there were only 400,000 pounds handled. the following year the comparatively great success of the production of the previous season induced larger plant ing in Buncombe and five or six of the adjacent counties, notably Yancey and Madison, and the result was an in crease of 1,100,000 pounds, making the total for 1884 1,500,000 pounds. In 1885 the business done footed up transactions amounting to 3,400,000 ounds, and the crop prospects for the present year are variously estimated from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 pounds. This estimate is made even in the face of the gloomy and unfavorable weather of the past month, which will necessarily affect the annual yield.
