Buncombe county can therefore not only safely but wisely take the steps necessary to secure the advent of four or half a dozen or a dozen new rail roads into its territory. The burden of construction, after all, falls upon the constructing companies. What the county s called upon to contribute would not build much over half a dozen miles of each of the roads for which aid is proposed to be given, and not a solitary cent towards equipment. What Buncombe is asked to give is the contribution of encouragement, good will and rational interest. It would attain its object in the construction of these roads, or any of them, at wonderfully small cost.
