The Sewerage Question. This is the question which should hold the thoughts of every citizen of Asheville until they shall decide by their vote that it shall be adopted and put to use at the earliest possible day. Next in importance to the introduction of the water supply is the system which secures its discharge. The water is indispensable its purity, its abundance, and the faci i-ties for its distribution and general diffu-sion give Asheville an enviable promi-nence for the perfection of its system. But the very abundance of the supply originates an evil which must be as care fully provided for as the opposite ex-treme of scarcity. The use of water, in many of its forms, implies pollution and pollution means disease. Therefore there exists the same necessity for the escape and discharge of the surplus of the supply as there is for its introduction. supply as there is for its introduction.

The agencies applied to the discharge of this surplus are such as are adapted tontit mechanically in carrying off with it the filth of the streets, the garbage of the back lots, the excrete of the priviles, all and every thing foul and offensive; every thing that pollutes the air that is breathed and the water that is drank; every thing that nursures the germ of discasse.
