SUITABLE AND STYLISH FROCKS FOR CHILDREN.

Mary Katherine Howard gives the perplexed mother some excellent hints for her winter sewing in "What children are wearing," in the January Woman's Home Companion.

"For school and every-day wear Scotch plaids seem to have the lead in materials, and are to be had in a great variety of all-wool and silk fabrics. They are desirable not only from a point of becomingness and beauty, but wear well and never show the dust and spots as plain materials do. Many times the plaids are combined with plain serge by making a low-cut plaid bodice, with yoke and sleeves of the plain material, and a wide band of the plaid material around the skirt of plain color. Poplins, too, are very popular this season, with a great diversity in colors and designs in checks. The plain colors make very pretty dressy gowns for the older girls, and velvet, lace and silk are used in their trimming. Cashmeres are always good and this season sees no exception to this rule. Ladies' cloth in light colors, with dark trimming in the form of bands, either in velvet, braid or fur, is much worn in frocks for young girls in their teens. While silk is tabooed by many mothers for children's wear, it finds its way into many frocks in the shape of plaids, bayadere stripes and polka-spot effects. There is really no more serviceable and becoming dress for a little girl of from five to ten than a black serge silk, made with low neck and no sleeves, worn with different colored gumpes and sleeves. Any spot of dirt or grease can easily be removed from the silk, and no traces of the blemish are seen, while in wool it usually roughens the surface and makes it a trifle lighter in color. Corduroy, velveteen and rep materials are also employed in the juvenile outfit, both as trimmings and entire gowns. Combination gowns of two or more colors are new and pretty, if the colors are chosen understandingly. The range of choice in colors is almost unlimited, and the excuse would be slow in coming for the placing of colors together that would clash and fight. Chalks with Dresden effects are greatly worn for dressy wear, and are quite as pretty and much less expensive than silk. They also have a modest, unpretentious baby look that makes them appear strictly a child's own material.

"Sashes are a conspicuous feature of children's gowns, and may be of ribbon, velvet, silk or the material of the gown, but there must be the same material would look complete. Plaid, striped and figured ribbon sashes are worn with gowns of plain material, and with plain materials the order is reversed and the sashes are more fanciful. The simple knot or short loop are given preference over the more elaborate arrangements which suggest a dress-trimming rather than an adjustable accessory. Four-inch ribbon is the favored width, and three yards is the regulation sash length."

YOUNG WIFE'S SOCIAL DUTIES

To simply live alone, with no provision for the gratification of the social instincts, is apt to prove too severe a strain upon the reserve forces of even the happiest marriage. There is some excuse to be made for the man who seeks society outside of the home wherein no thought is given to social pleasure, while the wife is apt to grow petty and personal, and so less attractive as a result of her withdrawal from intercourse with others. This dropping out is very easy, but even when prosperity comes and large social functions are possible it is too late to gain that most valuable possession, friendship, which is entirely independent of financial success. To have and to hold a place in the social life of the world is not only the right, but the duty of the young wife who desires to have a home in its truest and best sense. —Helen Jay in January Ladies' Home Journal.
