POLICEMAN SHOT.

Revolver in His Hip-Pocket Explodes Making an Ugly Wound.

Policeman E. M. Jarvis is on the retired list for the next six weeks, laid up by a pistol shot in his leg inflicted by his own revolver. The accident occurred in police headquarters, just before court convened yesterday morning. Jarvis had to appear, and while waiting for Police Justice Tison occupied the time by polishing his shoes. Sanitary Inspector W. H. Bird commented on his vanity, and laughingly picked up a whisk broom to dust his coat. He had just commenced on his coat collar when a 41 caliber Colt's revolver in Policeman Jarvis' hip pocket exploded. A bullet struck the tip of Inspector Bird's shoe, splitting the sole. Jarvis considered it fortunate that no one had been injured and was in the midst of a congratulatory sentence when he felt the blood trickling down his leg. A hasty examination showed that the bullet from the revolver had struck the calf of his leg just below the knee, plunging in a downward direction for over eight inches. The bullet that hit Inspector Bird's shoe was from a loose cartridge which Jarvis carried in his hip pocket. It had been projected by the bullet from the revolver. Jarvis was taken to Dr. E. B. Glenn's office and Mrs. George H. Fox, of Philadelphia, and H. L. Baird assisting, the bullet was cut out. It was fattened from contact with the loose cartridge and had made a jagged wound which will be difficult to heal. The injured man was later removed to his home on North Main street. He will recover sufficiently in about six weeks to return to duty. How the revolver exploded is still a mystery. The commonly accepted theory is that the hammer of the revolver caught in Jarvis' clothes.
