The late Cornelius Vanderbilt's caution is revealed by the manner in which he once protected himself in giving his autograph for a collection at a charity fair. He first wrote his name on a bit of paper, then carefully trimmed off the paper close down to the ink and lastly drew three red lines through the name.

The late Charles A. Pillsbury, the flour king, was not one of those men who make a success of everything they undertake. His first business venture, that of commission merchant in Montreal, was a disastrous failure. After paying his debts he went to Minneapolis and began the business that in a few years made him a

THE BEEHIVE.
