SLEIGHT OF HAND TRICK. A Performance in Legerdemain Which Baffled Unexpectedly. In a restaurant where patrons who wish to dine quietly away from the rush and bustle on the lower floor go up stairs two gentlemen were lunching a few days ago. Both were talking very animatedly and were apparently oblivious to their surroundings, especially to the colored waiter. If they knew that that individual was on earth, much less in their immediate presence, their attention to his whereabouts gave no clue to their knowledge. One of the diners was a young man of powerful build. He was evidently the host. When the waiter laid the check down on the white tablecloth and stepped back and watched them carefully, as is the custom of waiters who scent a tip, he carelessly reached in his vest pocket and, without appearing to look at the servant, placed both check and a new bank note side by side without a break in the argument. In a few moments the waiter re-entered, carrying a silver salver, in the center of which lay a 10 cent piece. Then he stepped back again, his glance alternating between the salver and the man who paid the bill. The argument came to an abrupt termination. The young man's eyes swept the immovable face of the waiter with a curiously searching glance not unmixed with amazement. Then he whispered a word to his friend whose eyes also scanned the face that impassively returned their glances. There was an eloquent silence. The young man beckoned the waiter to his side. "You are a slick one," he said quietly, but there was a ring in his tone that did not augur well for one of the party. "Just hand it over, please." "Hand over what, sir?" asked the waiter, innocently and with a pronounced rising inflection. "The change." "There it is, sir," indicating with a sweep of the hand toward the 10 cent piece. "Part of it. I want the rest." "Deed, that's all that is coming to you, sir. You gave me a $1 bill, and your check was 90 cents." The young man's features broke into a smile that made the lines of his mouth mold in a manner in which determination and amusement struggled for mastery. "That was a $20 bill I gave you," he said. "Because it was rolled tightly and we appeared to be so absorbed in our conversation you thought I did not notice you reduce it after securing the change to a one. I will give you ten seconds to deliver up the balance or I will choke the life out of you and have you arrested for theft. Come, I will count one, two, three, four—" "Deed, boss, you is mistaken. That was a one spot!" "Five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten!" "You is certainly mistaken, boss, that!" The young man was on his feet as he counted out the waiter. He seized the latter by the throat and with a quick movement forced the man to the floor. "Here it is, boss!" cried the waiter in terrified accents. "For the Lawd-a-mussy sakes, boss, don't pinch so hard!" He extracted from his coat pocket $19 in bills, which he eagerly pressed in the left hand of the young man who stood above him. The latter released his hold and, counting the bills, passed out of the room with his companion with not so much as a second look at the amateur prestidigitator kneeling on the floor ruefully rubbing his neck. The young man is a member of the United States secret service, and he knows the appearance of government currency better than most bank tellers, rolled or unrolled.—Washington Star.

Eloquents Are Rare in France. Runaway marriages are not contrived easily in France. No one in that country ever reaches an age when the law permits him to do away with the consent of parents and guardians. If a young man desires to marry, they must show the death certificates of their parents and have the written consent of their grandparents. If there should be no grandparents living, their death certificates must be produced, and so on among the various relatives of the intending bride and bridegroom, the consent of the conseil de famille (family council) beings absolutely necessary in all cases.

WOULD NOT SUFFER SO AGAIN FOR FIFTY TIMES ITS PRICE. I awoke last night with severe pains in my stomach. I never felt so badly in all my life. When I came down to work this morning I felt so weak I could hardly work. I went to Miller & McCurdy's drug store and they recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. It worked like magic and one dose fixed me all right. It certainly is the finest thing I ever used for stomach trouble. I shall not be wif out it in my home hereafter, for I should not care to endure the sufferings of last night again for fifty times its price.—G. H. Wilson, liverman, Burgettstown, Washington county, Pa. This remedy is for sale by C. A. Rysor, druggist.
