A VILLAGE BLACKSMITH SAVED HIS LITTLE SON'S LIFE.

Mr. H. H. Black, the well-known village blacksmith at Grahamsville Sullivan county, N. Y., says: "Our little son, five years old, has always been subject to croup, and so had have the attacks been that we have feared many times that he would die. We have had the doctor and used many medicines, but Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is my sole reliance. It seems to dissolve the tough mucus and by giving frequent doses when the croup symptoms appear we have found that the dreaded croup is cured before it gets settled. There is no danger in giving this remedy for it contains no opium or other injurious drug and may be given as confidently to a babe as to an adult. For sale by C. A. Raynor, druggist."

There's always room at the top—but few men care to dwell in an attic.

DON'T LIKE WHITE DOCTORS.

Chinamen Prefer the Crude Medication of Their Own Physicians. "You would think that with as large a Chinese population as is possessed by Chicago some at least of the white physicians of the city would have a fair sized Chinese practice," remarked a physician a few evenings ago, "especially when it is remembered that in this climate a great many of the Mongolians are given to various sorts of bodily ills."

"Don't white physicians practice among the Chinese?" "Not to any extent. Once in awhile they are called in by some of the Christianized and more-intelligent of the Chinamen, but the masses—those who are neither Christianized nor intelligent, according to our standards—will have nothing to do with a white doctor except as a last resort. And some of them won't even then."

"Make their own medicines, I suppose?" "No. They have their own doctor. I forget his name, but he makes his headquarters in one of the Chinatown stores. His presence is said to be so jealously guarded that few if any white persons ever come in contact with him. He is a venerable looking chap, with gray hair and a straggling gray beard. Steel bowed spectacles serve to give him a wise look. His prescriptions are filled from native drugs and herbs brought over from China by a New York firm of Chinese importers. A peculiar thing about a sick Chinaman is that he cannot be induced to take his medicine in doses at regular intervals as we Americans do. He wants to feel that he is doing something for his complaint when he swallows what is prescribed for him, and as a consequence the Chinese doctor's medicine is administered in doses of a pint or a quart each. Having taken one dose, the patient settles himself back to wait for the next day to bring the hour for taking another. I suppose this custom has something to do with the refusal of the Mongolians to have anything to do with American doctors and their doses of a spoonful or two every hour or half hour."

"The Chinese doctor's charges are only a quarter a visit, so that he has the advantage of us on the score of cheapness too. In extreme cases, like advanced stages of consumption, for instance, I have been called upon several times, but never to attend a patient afflicted with any ordinary ill, while scarcely one out of all the hundred odd physicians of my acquaintance has ever been into Chinatown professionally at all."—Chicago Chronicle.

INFORMAL BANKING.

Country Financial Houses More Free and Easy Than City Ones.

"If there is one place more than another that is business from start to finish and repeat," said the man who gets around occasionally, "it is a city bank. The big ones are almost oppressive in their formality, and even the little ones on side streets don't encourage a man to loaf and invite his soul after he has attended to what he came there for. But it is very different in the country, especially in the south. In the town down there where I spend a few weeks every year there are three banks, all good ones of a quarter of a million capital each and with handsome buildings, but instead of the narrow, penned up accommodations for customers as is the rule in city banks their rooms are commodious, and they are furnished with chairs and desks to write at and plenty of cuspidors for the tobacco chewers. The clerks are behind railings and counters, but theirs are the restricted quarters, and most of the space is set apart for the comfort and convenience of customers. They are the general meeting places for farmers and other visitors to town, and during business hours they are never empty."

"The work of the bank goes on just the same, for everybody is used to that sort of thing, and the crowd outside, more like a room than a bank, laugh and talk and chew tobacco as if that were part of the banking business. In the summer afternoons the big armchairs are carried out into the shade, if the bank happens to be on the shady side of the street, and they decorate with their occupants the whole street front of the building. In the winter there is a big stove, red hot most of the time, that makes it pleasant for the people who have ridden five or ten miles through the cold, and the crowd is thicker than ever because the weather is not propitious for street corner conferences for it is summer. I have never seen the staid decorum of the city bank in the country, and I am sure if any man with newfangled notions were to attempt to conduct a bank on such lines he wouldn't get enough business to declare a centennial dividend of a quarter of 1 per cent. The people simply wouldn't have it, and if they couldn't make the bank their headquarters for trading talk and their general meeting place they would not go there at all."—New York Sun.

A Use For the Thumb.

In the notebook of the late Bishop Fraser of Manchester there is a story of a former young curate of the English village of Stoke which shows the value of a little common sense in deciding a knotty point. The curate, being exceedingly anxious at all times to do things in the order of the liturgy, once insisted when marrying a couple on the ring being put on the fourth finger. The bride rebelled and finally said: "I would rather die than be married on my little finger." For an instant the curate wavered; then he said, "But the rubric says so." Matters were at a standstill—the bride tearful, the groom uneasy, the curate determined—when the parish clerk stepped in and said: "In these cases, sir, the thumb counts as a digit."

Mount Ararat.

Mount Ararat, the traditional resting place of the ark and still known by the Persians as "Noah's mountain," stands on the confines of Russia, Turkey and Persia. It is 1,800 feet higher than Mont Blanc and in May has 9,000 feet of snow on its slopes. "No single mountain," says a well known mountaineer, "presents such a magnificent appearance." Though an extinct volcano, it has been known to emit sulphurous vapors from its sides. It was first climbed by Dr. Parrott in 1829.—London Mail.

Science and Society.

A friend of mine asked to a dear old scientist who could not be persuaded to accept any one's hospitality or stay at any house, "Well, but why won't you?" "Oh," was the immediate reply, "I should have to wash and dress and all that rubbish, and I can't be bothered about it."
