TRAGIC TALE OF AN INTAGLIO.

Memorial of a Girl's Death Drove Two Men to Suicide.

A New York artist is the possessor of A New York artist is the possessor of an intaglio which has a peculiarly tragic history. Two of its former owners have committed suicide because of influences more or less directly connected with the fate of the unfortunate girl whose death mask was the model of the sculpture The present owner, however, is more artistic than sentimental or superstitious and has no fears that he will imitate the two previous possessors of the intaglio.

Not many years ago an artist of more than local reputation was living in Boston. He had an only daughter, a beautiful girl with many graces which would have made her a still more lovely woman. But, like the girl Hood sang about, she was "rashly importunate," and to end her sorrows she drowned herself in the bay. The artist father, though keenly sensitive to the great grief, still noted how artistically beautiful the girl was in death. He made a death mask, from which the intaglio was made.

But the face haunted him. Those classic lines, representing his daughter as she appeared floating in the waters of the bay, her eyes closed and her hair floating like a mermaid's, seemed to lure him to follow her. He reflected on her life and her sadder fate; how it might have been because of his own sternness that she had destroyed her young life and how in a large measure he might be responsible for her destruction. The thoughts became unbearable, and he drowned himself in the bay at the identical spot where the beautiful girl had gone to her fate.

The artist's wife could not bear to have the intaglio near her and gave it to a New York friend. The friend was not superstitious, but her husband was a sporting man who lost and won with the reckless abandon of men of his kind. Naturally he was a firm believer in luck, and the marble features of that beautiful face had a strange infatuation for him. He knew something of the history of both the girl and her father. He mused over the sculpture, grew despondent and finally ended all by drowning himself. The widow of the sporting man was not superstitious, but after the death of her husband and knowing the fate of the girl and the artist she was willing to part with her treasure. The present owner as an artist admires the bit of marble and as a lover of the strange and curious prizes it for its story.-Chicago Tribune.

HOW THE BRAIN TIRES.

Its Cells Shrivel Up Like a Partly Collapsed Balloon.

Brain cells, when quite fresh and vigorous, may be likened to small balloons inflated ready for an ascent. They are round and full, and when seen under the microscope they give evidence of being distended. The cells of the tired brain, on the other hand, are seen to be shrunken, as an air ball or toy balloon from which most of the air or gas has escaped.

When our brains begin to work after a refreshing rest or sleep they are, says Pearson's Weekly, full of nerve fluid, which the absorbents of the body and brain have stored up there like bees fill their comb. So soon as work begins this vital force is sapped to meet the demands upon the brain, and the process that goes on during the whole time it is working may be described in the follow-

Imagine that these cells are small goblets filled with liquid and that they have a tiny stem through which runs a tube or opening. The liquid in the goblet is drained by the demands of mind and body and slowly trickles through the opening, drop by drop, until either the work ceases or the goblet is exhausted.

This latter condition is not often reached for the simple reason that the owner of the brain is very much more likely to collapse. When the cell has yielded half its vital fluid, you begin to experience a feeling of fatigue, and if you go on drawing the contents of the cells you are doing yourself injury in proportionate degree, and nature will make you pay for it in some way or other.

But all the cells are not involved in any kind of mental work, which means that one part of the brain may be every actively at work while the other is resting and storing up nerve fluid. Thus it is that a man suffering from brain fag may leave his books and go golfing or cycling and feel that he is really resting. Other cells are being called upon for work now, while the tired ones-those required for mental activity-are enjoying

But it follows that the part of the brain which is called into activity for bodily exercise is now getting tired, while the other part of the brain is still at work to some extent, and so the whole of our brain cells become fatigued, and total rest in the shape of sleep is absolutely essential.

She Was King.

England, but also king of France. According to the Salic law no woman could be ruler of France, and hence there could be no queen, but Elizabeth did not let that prevent her assuming a title. "If "I will be king."

The monarchs of England bore the title for 432 years, but on Jan. 1, 1801, it was omitted for the first time since the days of Edward III.

The English monarch is still called "Defender of the Faith," a title earned against the Lutherans which so pleased mation.

Why Her Terms Were High. One of the women delegates at the journalists' conference told an amusing story illustrating the ambition which many persons have to see their names in print. She was engaging a servant, an. Irish girl, but found that her terms were unusually high.

"How is it," she asked, "that you want such high wages?" "Shure, ma'am," was the answer, given with a delightful brogue, "my name's been in the papers." "In the papers! What do you mean?"

THE BOY WEBSTER.

Daniel Webster as a lad is thus described by John Bach McMaster, the historian, in the first of his illustrated papers on the statesman, published in the November Century:

As the boy grew in years and st tu e his life was powerfully affected by the fact that he was the youngest son and ninth child in a family of ten; that his health was far from good; that he showed tastes and mental traits that stood out in marked contrast with those of his brothers and sisters; and that he was, from infancy, the pet of the family. Such daily work as a farmer's lad was then made to do was not for him. Yet he was expected to do something, and might have been seen barefooted in frock and trousers, astride of the horse that dragged the plow between the rows of corn, or raking hay, or binding the wheat the previous experience needed. For sale reapers cut, or following the cows to pasture in the morning and home again at night, or tending logs in his father's saw mill. When such work was to be done it was his custom to take a book along, set the log, hoist the gates, and while the saw passed slowly through the tree trunk, an operation which, in those days, consumed some twenty minutes, he would settle himself comfortably and read.
